"You will always be a mother to me," said he gently

"Tell me again of her—the other one I have to get it all clearly in my mind It's vague now

She repeated the story of how he came into the world and into her possession almost immediately after that event. Now she told it clearly, concisely, not distractedly as in the night. She was a woman of few words and always had been Her prayers were short, morning and night She could not have made them long

"Adam came to my husband one day and said that Lucy Barlow was in trouble She was expecting a baby He implored Henry to take her up to Halifax on the Lanigan She was the dearest sweetest girl in all Gloucester. I will say that, laddie Her father was the captain of a whaler and was away for many months out of the year Her mother was dead and Lucy spent most of her time with an uncle who lived here in Corinth In the summer time she went to Gloucester to visit an aunt. But while she was here she saw a great deal of her She met Adam Carr at our house He was then married and he was very young too young for the woman he was married to He wasn't more than 21 or 22 and she was 35 They were not happy together Well, of course he fell in love with Lucy That's the long and the short of it

"They just couldn't help themselves, it was that right and natural Well, my husband asked me what we should do to help her and I said at once that I would go up to Halifax with him on the next voyage and take Lucy along Your father I mean Adam Carr of course was boarding with us at the time. His wife lived in Gloucester He persuaded Lucy to go with us, promising to come up as soon as he could arrange to do so He was mate on his father's fishing schooner and couldn't get away at that time It was his plan to get a divorce from his wife, but just how it was to be done I can't say It never did happen but it didn't matter in the end She died a few years later It's a God's pity she couldn't have died before Lucy had her trouble We took Lucy away on the Lanigan. I was to stay with her through it all and the Lanigan started back to Corinth She went down with all on board just inside Eddy's Islands on the awful night you've heard of oh but I can't speak of that' My husband was lost

'I left Lucy there and came back here to wait for the sea to give up my dead. My own baby was coming Ah, it was a dreadful dreadful time, my laddie Well, one day, four or five months after the wreck Adam Carr came to me with a letter from Lucy She wanted him to come to her at once I went with him by steamer We got there just before you were born Lucy died the next day Three weeks later my baby came a girl baby and my only one My little one died the day it was born but Lucy's lived and thrived

"It was then that Adam Carr suggested that I be mother to you, that you be known as Henry Payson's boy as long as you should live He begged so hard and I wanted my own baby so much that I—well I fell in with his plan That is how you came into the world and how you became John Payson, son of Henry Payson, lost at sea months before you were born I have tried to be a good mother to you, laddie, all these years and now——'

He leaned over and kissed her, the tears streaming down his cheeks She broke off in the middle of the lament to stroke his hand and murmur words of comfort

Then as if moved by a common impulse, they arose and stood together at the side of the man in the bed He was staring straight up into their faces, and there was unmistakable intelligence in those bloodshot, bulging eyes. They drew back appalled He knew! He had heard and he understood'

Suddenly John stepped forward and tenderly laid his hand on Adam Carr's forehead He bent forward and said

"It's all right father It's all right"

Adam Carr's eyes closed slowly

"The New York doctor will be here at 2, and the nurse also," said the son, as much for the stricken man's benefit as for the Widow Payson

The outer door was opened and someone entered the parlor An odd expression came into John Payson's face. His jaw fell a look of utter dismay grew in his eyes.

"Why—why," he began blankly, "I don't believe I told Mary that you are not my mother I didn't think She must think that you—you are——"

Someone was rapping on the door casing not 10 feet away a gentle but imperative summons that cut short his wretched reflections

"Who's there?" he called out in subdued tones

"It is I," came back Mary's voice "I have come to see if I can help you and your mother"

He sprang forward and drew the curtains apart

"Eric has telephoned from the courthouse that house that everything is well with him. So I came here as quickly as I could"

She came bravely into the room and looked at Adam Carr

CHAPTER XXII

MR. COOPER'S BUSY DAY

It was by far the busiest day in the life of Mr Joseph Cooper, editor. Do not overlook the fact that he was deprived of the right to publish the one great piece of news produced in Corinth and by Corinth some years prior to the prodigious doings of this day in April. At that time, you may remember, he got very drunk because he could not "print the news." On the present occasion he imbibed freely because he could print it. When you stop to consider that the Corinth Courier was made up largely of "plate matter" and "standing ads," and that Joseph was aided in the collection of sparse local news items by a young- ster who could spell beautifully but had no idea when to do it, you may in a sense appreciate the magnitude of the task that confronted him. All in one day came three of the most startling "stories" Corinth had ever known. So all-absorbing were these items that a disastrous runaway on Main street was completely overlooked by the bibulous scribe and his panic- stricken assistant, with the result that Mr. Peters, who had an arm broken in the tumble from his wagon, ordered his paper stopped because no mention was made of the "item." What was the sense, said he, of having your arm broken in the most thrilling runaway of the year if the fool reporters didn't put it in the paper? And he was right. What was the sense?

First of all, Joseph had the Hon. Horace Blagden's wonderful gift to the City to "write up." That, in itself, was enough to bring out all that was in him for one day Just as he was comfortably well under way on the job and long before his first drink of the day—came those staggering developments at the court house. Before he could turn round, it seemed to him, the cry went up that Adam Carr, the celebrated detective, had been foully assassinated. From that time on Joseph did nothing but turn around; he fairly whirled. The cub reporter ran up and down stairs so often that it got to be a habit with him, and he couldn't stop. Two amiable and resourceful tramp printers, loafing in the composing room, came to the rescue. They went out and gathered up the stray ends of the news, put them together and set type so rapidly and at such length that Joseph never quite recovered from his surprise and gratification They "lifted" ads without discrimination and substituted live reading matter," they "chopped out" columns of paid locals with a prodigality that cost Joseph as much as $20 in "trade" they got the news and they printed the news, they transformed the Courier into a sickening mass of typographical errors—for no one was there to read proof on them—but they turned out a "scarehead" journal that Corinth never quite got over talking about.

After it was all over, they drew their pay—a staggering lot of ems they had set, by the way—and proceeded to get luxuriously "tight," landing in gaol before midnight. Which produced another sensation for the cub reported the next day It was the cub reporter's practice to make long visits in the town hall daily, between trains because it was cool there in the summer time and warm in the winter Generally you could catch him napping there

The leading editorial in the Courier on this memorable day was not written by Mr Cooper It was in the shape of a proclamation, and it was written and signed by Horace Blagden in his private room at the bank It crowded out the magnificient editorial tribute devised by Joseph Cooper to reflect, in an anticipatory sort of way the boundless gratitude of the people who were to be benefited by the princely gift of Mr Blagden, exclusive mention of which may be found in another column of this issue.'

This signed statement of Horace Blagden was more remarkable than anything that had ever appeared in the Courier It may be set forth here in few words, although it covered more than an entire column of the newspaper

The father of Chetwynd Blagden took this means of announcing to the world that he held Eric Midthorne absolutely blameless'

Moreover, he went on to say that he considered the taking off of his son to be the act of a just, all-wise Providence, 'whose ways, though strange and inscrutable, bring pain only to him who seeks to dispute them." He declared, in no half-hearted terms, that he would stand at his unhappy nephew's side during the trial that was to come not as prosecutor but as defender and that through him, the father, the spirit of Chetwynd Blagden would rise to proclaim the innocence of the self-accused It was his prayer that the case might be brought to trial without delay, and that justice might be appeased in the speedy acquittal of my beloved nephew, Eric Midthorne."

The name of Adam Carr was not mentioned

In another column, however, appeared the news of Mr. Carr's illness. The one great feature of the story was missing, however, for the simple season that it did not come to light.

Mary Midthorne prevailed. She was at the Payson cottage when the polite printer appeared, in eager pursuit of the news. If he was disappointed to learn that there had been no assassination, he was careful to conceal the fact In truth, he admitted cheerfully that he was "blamed glad of it," they were so hard pressed for time and room up at the Courier office. Mary kept John Payson from revealing more of the truth than was necessary concerning Adam Carr The perspiring printer went away directly, in possession of everything except the sensation involved.

"Why should you tell it to the world?" argued Mary, confronting Payson and his foster mother in the kitchen, whither they had fled leaving the unsuspecting doctor to tell what he knew to the interviewer "He doesn't acknowledge you as his son, why should you say he is your father? Just four people know the truth, John It has been a secret held by two people for more than 30 years. Why can't we keep it to the very end? Just you and I and Mrs Payson He will never speak"

Payson agreed to this, with the single provision that in due time Eric should be told.

Our Decrepit Submarine Flotilla.

Congressman Gardner, in the North American Review

According to the navy and marine corps list and directory published by the navy department July 1 1915, we have 38 submarines actually completed. This number includes the submarine F-4, which the navy department somewhat grimly continues to reckon as "in full commission," although it has only lately been at the bottom of the sea The nine oldest submarines are in the Philippines or other Asiatic waters. Eleven submarines are in the Pacific either on our western coast or in Hawaiian waters. Five are at the Panama canal, and the remaining 13 are on the Atlantic coast After months of effort, 12 of these 13 submarines were got ready for the naval review in New York last May Six of the 12 broke down in the maneuvers which followed the review. There you have our exact status at the present time. On the Atlantic and gulf coast we have 13 submarines, half of them decrepit, to guard over 3,000 miles of seashore One submarine for each 130 miles seems a meager allowance.

In the last four years congress has appropriated money to build 38 more submarines. About half of them are now under way, and four of them (authorized in August, 1912) are nearly completed. Only three of the entire 38 are to be of the fast sea-going type.

The upshot of it all appears to be that, up to the present time, it has taken three years, and often longer, to complete a submarine after congress has voted to build it. If we want vessels in a hurry, we have probably got to pay big premiums for speedy construction. Every one knows that small submarines have been completely built for the British government since the European war broke out. No doubt we, too, could do as much.

Frank Cutshall, of Tarentum, Pa., received a letter from Miss Jeannette Ross, of Tyrone, Pa., telling him that she had found a paper balloon on which was written Cutshall's name. The balloon had traveled 150 miles and had crossed the Chestnut, Laurel and Allegheny ridges.

He Was an Expert.

There was only a glimmer of light in the hall, but the old gentleman at the head of the stairs could just discern the outlines of two figures, very close together, near the front door

"Helen!" he snapped angrily, "this is too much! It's half-past eleven, and that young man's not gone yet! Doesn't he know how to say good-night?"

After a short silence there floated up the stairs to him in his daughter's voice, low, breathless, languorous:

"Doesn't he know how to say good-night?" she echoed. "Oh, father, I should think he does!"

SUFFERED FOR FOUR YEARS.

Mr. J. M. Sinclair of Olivehill, Tenn., writes: "I strained my back, which weakened my kidneys and caused an awful bad backache and inflammation of the bladder. Later I became so much worse that I consulted a doctor, who said that I had Diabetes and that my heart was affected. I suffered for four years and was in a nervous state and very much depressed The doctor's medicine didn't help me, so I decided to try Dodds Kidney Pills, and I cannot say enough to express my relief and thankfulness, as they cured me. Diamond Dinner Pills cured me of Constipation."

THE CHARM OF MOTHERHOOD

Enhanced By Perfect Physical Health.

The experience of Motherhood is a trying one to most women and marks distinctly an epoch in their lives. Not one woman in a hundred is prepared or understands how to properly care for herself. Of course nearly every woman nowadays has medical treatment at such times, but many approach the experience with an organism unfitted for the trial of strength, and when it is over her system has received a shock from which it is hard to recover. Following right upon this comes the nervous strain of caring for the child, and a distinct change in the mother results.

There is nothing more charming than a happy and healthy mother of children, and indeed child-birth under the right conditions need be no hazard to health or beauty. The unexplainable thing is that, with all the evidence of shattered nerves and broken health resulting from an unprepared condition, and with ample time in which to prepare, women will persist in going blindly to the trial.

Every woman at this time should rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism.

In many homes once childless there are now children because of the fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy and strong.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

ANURIC!

The Newest Discovery in Chemistry

This is a recent discovery of Doctor Pierce, who is head of the Invalid's Hotel and Surgical Institute at Buffalo, N. Y. Experiments at Dr. Pierce's Hospital for several years proved that there is no other eliminator of uric acid that can be compared to it. For those easily recognized symptoms of inflammation—as backache, scalding urine and frequent urination, as well as sediment in the urine, or if uric acid in the blood has caused rheumatism, it is simply wonderful how surely "Anuric" acts. The best of results are always obtained in cases of acute rheumatism in the joints, in gravel and gout, and invariably the pains and stiffness which so frequently and persistently accompany the disease rapidly disappear.

Go to your nearest drug store and simply ask for a 50-cent package of "Anuric" manufactured by Dr. Pierce, or even write Dr. Pierce for a large trial package (10c). If you suspect kidney or bladder trouble, send him a sample of your water and describe symptoms. Dr. Pierce's chemist will examine it, then Dr. Pierce will report to you without fee or charge.

NOTE.—"Anuric" is thirty-seven times more active than lithia in eliminating uric acid, and is a harmless but reliable chemical compound that may be safely given to children, but should be used only by grown-ups who actually wish to restore their kidneys to perfect health, by conscientiously using one box—or more in extreme cases—as "Anuric" (thanks to Doctor Pierce's achievement) is by far the most perfect kidney and bladder corrector obtainable.

Paxtine

A Soluble Antiseptic Powder to be dissolved in water as needed

For Douches

In the local treatment of woman's ills, such as leucorrhoea and inflammation, hot douches of Paxtine are very efficacious. No woman who has ever used medicated douches will fail to appreciate the clean and healthy condition Paxtine produces and the prompt relief from soreness and discomfort which follows its use. This is because Paxtine possesses superior cleansing, disinfecting and healing properties.

For ten years the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. has recommended Paxtine in their private correspondence with women, which proves its superiority. Women who have been relieved say it is "worth its weight in gold." At druggists. 50c. large box or by mail. Sample free. The Paxton Toilet Co Boston, Mass.

GRAY HAIR BECOMES DARK, THICK, GLOSSY

Look years younger! Try Grandma's recipe of Sage and Sulphur and nobody will know.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle for about 50 cents. Everybody uses this old, famous recipe, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

OLD-TIME COLD CURE—DRINK HOT TEA!

Get a small package of Hamburg Breast Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teacup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thereby breaking up a cold.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

RUB RHEUMATISM FROM STIFF, ACHING JOINTS

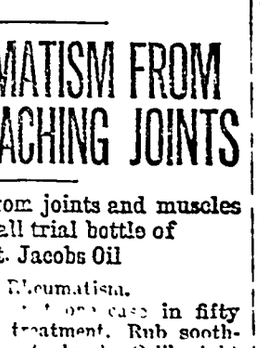
Rub Soreness from joints and muscles with a small trial bottle of old St. Jacobs Oil

Stop that Rheumatism. No matter of how long standing case in fifty requires internal treatment. Rub soothing, penetrating "St. Jacobs Oil" right on the "tender spot," and by the time you count one, two, three—out comes the rheumatism. "St. Jacob's Oil" is a liniment which never disappoints and can't burn the skin. It takes pain, soreness and stiffness from aching joints, muscles and bones; stops sciatica, lumbago, backache, neuralgia.

Limber up! Get a 25 cent bottle of old-time, honest "St. Jacobs Oil" from any drug store, and in a moment you'll be free from pains, aches and stiffness. Don't suffer! Rub rheumatism away.

"TIZ" FOR TIRED SORE, ACHING FEET

Ah! what relief. No more tired feet; no more burning feet, swollen, bad smelling, sweaty feet. No more pain in corns callouses or bunions. No matter what ails your feet or what under the sun you've tried without getting relief, just use "TIZ." "TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet; "TIZ" is magical; "TIZ" is grand; "TIZ" will sure your foot troubles so you'll never limp or draw up your face in pain. Your shoes won't seem tight and your feet will never, never hurt or get sore, swollen or tired.



Get a 25 cent box at any drug or department store, and get relief

The match was for all of the gate receipts and a $100.00 purse.

From the Kanawha paper it is observed that the tax levy for next year amounts to 44 mills. This is the municipal levy alone and does not include the school levy. The taxes in the little town to the northwest promise to be quite an item next year and the property owners will know they have done a mighty thing, but they are making some town up there and a mighty good one too.—Belmond Herald-Press.

[illegible] one of Dows, a brother [illegible] of Belmond, was married last week to Mrs. Stella L. Bardwell of Belle Plaine, Iowa. There is a romance connected with this wedding as the bride was the play supervisor at a chautauqua held at Dows a couple of years ago and at this same chautauqua Mr. Klemme was one of the guarantors and personally sold some $500 worth of tickets. He has now been rewarded for his public activities.—Belmond Herald-Press.

Amos Bowrey, a Belmond tailor, was killed at Clarion last week by a Great Western switch engine. He was on his way home from Fort Dodge in company with some other young men, and from some unknown reason got off the train at Clarion and stepped in front of the switch engine, being killed instantly. According to reports the party had been to Fort Dodge on a thirst-quenching trip and this likely accounts for the horrible accident.

Many of the readers of this paper have been anxious to know what sentence Nels L Nelson former clerk of courts of this county received in the courts of North Dakota, where he was recently convicted of fraud in banking. This paper has learned from an authoritative source that the sentence imposed was a fine of $1,000 or one year in prison The money was raised, the fine paid and the defendant discharged from custody. He and his wife are expected to return to Iowa soon Belmond Herald-Press.

Why It Pays To Trade With Firms That Advertise

¶ Advertising creates sales. The modern business man knows this. He also knows he must depend upon many sales with a small profit rather than on a few with big profits. The world knows the firm that advertises most can sell cheapest.

PICKS MAXWELL FROM BIG FIELD

Big Detroit Company Chosen for New Alliance by Klemme Auto & Light Co.

NEW CARS HANDSOME

Local Organization Enthusiastic Over Prospects for Big Business.

Formal ratification has reached this city of a contract whereby the Maxwell car is to be handled here by Klemme Auto & Light Co. This ratification was the conclusion of negotiations which had been informally closed some time ago

By the terms of this arrangement bringing as it does an active and ample organization to the Maxwell army, adequate representation for this popular-priced car is assured here While the present contract runs for one year only, the solid permanence of the parties interested gives ground for the belief that relations will be of indefinite length of time Such is, in fact, a characteristic feature of Maxwell agencies all over the country.

The entire organization of the new local Maxwell store is enthusiastic over the possibilities of the alliance.

"We took our time and looked over the whole field," said Mr. H. K. Stille, of the Klemme Auto & Light Co

"We were out to pick, without the use of anything but cold common sense, the car that would make us the most money during the season of 1916, and indefinitely into the future We believe we have gotten the best one in the Maxwell. While the dealer's margin of profit on a $655 car is small, the market is immense and the volume of sales assured, in case the car stands up and gives satisfaction We know that the Maxwell will do this. The Maxwell cars of last year and the season before gained the reputation for beauty, power and efficiency second to none in the light-car field. This year's car is handsomer, larger and more efficient than ever before, as we thoroughly convinced ourselves before signing our contract Best of all, it fulfills in a gratifying way its legitimate heritage of sturdiness--a quality for which Maxwells have been famous for many years of motoring history

"We have made ample arrangements for a service department, designed to keep every Maxwell car in our territory at its top efficiency all the time In this detail we have been greatly helped by the factory organization which has developed a plan of supply to dealers that has shown itself adequate and prompt."

WHEN YOU WAKE UP DRINK GLASS OF HOT WATER

Wash the poisons and toxins from system before putting more food into stomach.

Says Inside-bathing makes any one look and feel clean, sweet and refreshed.

Wash yourself on the inside before breakfast like you do on the outside. This is vastly more important because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing illness, while the bowel pores do.

For every ounce of food and drink taken into the stomach, nearly an ounce of waste material must be carried out of the body. If this waste material is not eliminated day by day it quickly ferments and generates poisons, gases and toxins which are absorbed or sucked into the blood stream, through the lymph ducts which should suck only nourishment to sustain the body.

A splendid health measure is to drink, before breakfast each day, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless way to wash these poisons, gases and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels; thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs but very little at the drug store but is sufficient to make anyone an enthusiast on inside-bathing. Men and women who are accustomed to wake up with a dull, aching head or have furred tongue, bad taste, nasty breath, sallow complexion, others who have bilious attacks, acid stomach or constipation are assured of pronounced improvement in both health and appearance shortly.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

Fine Convention Held at Kanawha Last Week, Thursday and Friday

The concensus of opinion of those who attended the thirty-fifth annual convention of the Hancock County Sunday Sunday School Association at Kanawha on November 4th and 5th was to the effect that this was one of the best conventions held in this county in some time. The program was especially strong. Many outside speakers brought messages of inspiration and help to the convention. The attendance was good and delegates from Forest City, Miller, Garner, Klemme, Goodell, Stilson, Britt, Hayfield and Corwith were present. The address of Hon. Eugene W. Chafin of Tucson, Arizona, was well received, his subject being the church and the school. Many phases of Sunday School work was discussed and proved very interesting. The matter of graded schools received considerable attention. We are not living up to our opportunities in Sunday School work when we do not properly grade our boys and girls; for this is the secret of the public school's success

The Association is hoping to be of great value to the Sunday Schools of our county during the coming year. There is vast opportunity for better results and it is the desire of the county officers to help our schools put into practice much of the splendid suggestions that were discussed at the convention. Next year the county convention will be held at Garner, at which time a special effort will be made to have the schools adopt up-to-date methods in Sunday School work.

Chairman—Publicity Committee.

THE NON-ADVERTISER MIGHT TAKE NOTICE

It may be that advertising is too expensive, a game of chance, something which only certain concerns can undertake, or subject to the oft repeated excuse, "our business is different," or that other "just as good" excuse, "we manufacture staple goods which cannot be advertised."

Different forms of business require different forms of advertising, but—

The largest wholesalers of staples in the world employ no road salesmen. They secure all their business by advertising. Butler Brothers.

The largest bakers of crackers—just plain every day crackers—advertise The National Biscuit Co.

Yes, the business of the concern which does not advertise is different. It is smaller.

Its principal assets can be covered by a fire insurance policy because they are buildings, machinery and materials.

The reverse is true of concerns which advertise. The value of their good will, reputation—what other people know about them—is worth many times these "tangible assets," and is so estimated by wise bankers.

Yes, this plus, this good will, this anchoring of a name, in the consciousness of people—advertising—costs money, but—

It buys the sort of an asset that cannot burn up, blow up or be destroyed by flood. Burglars can't steal it.

The only way to lose it is to play unfair But like everything worth while, it must be nourished, kept alive, and founded on correct principles.

All of which, although demonstrably true, does not justify the purchase of advertising just because it is sold under that label.

Spending money is not advertising.

If this were true, there would be no profit in advertising. It would be a drug on the market.

It is a good condition of affairs that puts advertising on a higher basis than money, because—

It takes the right sort of manhood and the right sort of gumption to make advertising profitable.

It is a sure enough business proposition, and when so undertaken it pays—handsomely. —Standard Advertising.

The vestal virgins always kept fire burning in their temple at Rome, and no doubt needed them for heating the humble hot water bottles after eating the following menu, declared to have been a banquet served the girls by Julius Caesar. First course, prickly globe fish, oysters, thrushes, asparagus, fattened chickens, oyster patties, black and white sea acorns, sea nettles, snipe, cotelettes of venison and of wild boar, fattened wild game, powdered with flour, second course, swine udders, wild boar's head, swine udder patties, ducks, boiled teal ducks, roasted wild game, third course, puddings, custards, Picentish sandwiches, wines, Falerno, Xeres, Spanish Medoc.

The new polyvalent serum discovered by French physicians which is a sort of combinations of serums against different varieties of bacteria, is reported as giving wonderful results in French military hospitals. Wounds so serious and so badly infected that recovery appears quite hopeless are said to heal with surprising rapidity under the use of the serum so that hundreds of lives are saved and much suffering is prevented. Although the serum is being prepared as rapidly as possible, the supply is not sufficient for more than the base hospitals where the worst cases are found.

According to Godfrey Isaacs, managing director of Marconi's wireless telegraph company, a wireless message, announcing to German sea captains that war had been declared on England and warning them to make for neutral ports was flashed for a radius of 2,000 miles over the system of German wireless telegraph stations at 5 p. m., August 4, 1914. This message, he declares, saved the bulk of the German merchant marine, worth millions of dollars.

GOVERNOR SUSPENDS FINES IMPOSED FOR "SOFT" DRINK SALES

Action Knocks League Attorney Out of $280 In Commission For Collecting Fines.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 6.—Governor Clarke late yesterday afternoon suspended fines of $200 imposed against each of 14 Des Moines druggists for the sale of bevetone, a beverage said to contain a slight trace of alcohol. Incidentally, he made it impossible for M. S. Odle, attorney for the Iowa Anti-Saloon league, to obtain a 10 per cent fee for the collection of the fines which would aggregate $280.

The action of the governor means that the 14 druggists in question will not be required to pay the fines assessed against them by Judge Utterback, of the Polk county district court, so long as they do not again sell alcoholic liquors, bevetone included.

In suspending the fines of the druggists, Governor Clarke left no doubt in the minds of those at the hearing that he was not in sympathy with the wholesale prosecutions started by W. C. Barber, superintendent of the Iowa Anti-Saloon league, and M S. Odle, its chief counsel and raider. He said:

"I am assuming that all persons directly connected with these cases are acting in good faith. If everyone is so acting they certainly cannot find any fault with my action."

The druggists whose fines were suspended are

C. H. Snyder, W. P. Henry, S. P. Fitzgerald, H. B. Press, O. A. Weaver, E. L. Twining, E. T. Thoampson, F. R. Davis, George McEnroe, C. F. Norton, F M Winfrey, Julius Adler, E. S. Veatch and H. B. Knight

Attorney Odle will receive an attorney's fee of $25 in each case, as the governor has no power to suspend costs. Odle, however, will lose the 10 per cent fee for collection of the fines.

PROMINENT IDA COUNTY COUPLE WEDDED 50 YEARS

Ida Grove, Ia., Nov. 6.—The homes of F. D. Babcock, sr., and F. D. Babcock, jr., in this city, have been entertaining relatives from several parts of Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado and Illinois, for several days this week in honor of the golden wedding anniversary of the senior Mr. Babcock and his wife. These well known Ida Grove residents were united in marriage at Rockford, Ill., 50 years ago last Monday. They came to Iowa one year after their marriage, locating at Boonesborro, Ia., where they remained until the year 1887, when they came to Ida Grove. For a number of years Mr Babock was engaged in buying grain. He was the instigator of a cooperative grain association to secure an adjustment of grain rates and, in 1896, he interested a number of prominent grain dealers throughout northwestern Iowa in the formation of a mutual grain shippers' insurance association It has been one of the successful insurance organizations of the state from the start, due to Mr Babcock's efforts. He has been secretary of the association during its entire existence. The company owns and occupies one of the best buildings of the town and keeps a big force of employes.

Mr. and Mrs. Babcock have a family of three daughters and two sons, as follows Mrs. T W Prucell, wife of the editor of the Hampton, Ia., Chronicle, Mrs. William Finch, of Ida county; Miss Percis Babcock, at home, J V D. Babcock, Sioux City, F. D. Babcock, jr., of this city.

Mr Babcock is 70 years of age and Mrs. Babcock is 69 They are both enjoying excellent health. They have 17 grandchildren, all but six of them being present at the anniversary celebration.

MRS. McDERMOTT AWARDED JUDGMENT FOR $10,895

Sac City, Ia., Nov 6—A jury in district court here last night reported an award of $10,895 in favor of Mrs. Mary McDermott and against Ida county. The case was brought to Sac county for trial on a change of venue from Ida county, through application of plaintiff.

The plaintiff's husband, M G. McDermott, was killed on September 5 1914, by the collapse of a bridge near Ida Grove, while he was attempting to cross with a traction engine. Mrs McDermott sued Ida county, because of the accident, for $15,000, alleging that the bridge was faulty

On the part of the county it was set up that Mr McDermott had been warned that the bridge was not safe for crossing with an engine and that there was contributory negligence in disregarding the warning. The plaintiff contended that no warning signal was displayed at the bridge and that, if the county knew the structure to be unsafe, it was negligent in not taking special measures for public protection.

Evidence was presented that the county tractor, while at work on a road in that vicinity, had crossed the bridge regularly, this point being raised to show that the officials considered the bridge safe for traffic of that kind.

GOVERNOR CLARKE'S FATHER PASSES 91ST MILESTONE

Bloomfield, Ia., Nov. 6.—John Clarke, the venerable father of Gov. George W. Clarke, recently celebrated his 91st birthday at the home of his granddaughter, Mrs. Will Putnam, of near Drakesville. Mr. Clarke is enjoying good health for one of his advanced years. John Clarke, one of a large family, was born in Springboro, Warren county, Ohio, and is the only living member of the family of brothers and sisters. In his youth he followed the trade of blacksmith.

REWARD WILL BE POSTED FOR GALLAGHER MURDERER

Davenport, Ia., Nov. 6.—The city council is to offer a reward for information leading to the arrest of the holdup man who shot and killed James Gallagher, of Ottumwa, early Sunday morning.

SIX STUDENTS ADMIT TAKING AUTOMOBILES JUST FOR JOY RIDES

Des Moines Police Finally Get Line on Mysterious Events of Past Month.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 6.—A police automobile was driven to a side street near North high school shortly before noon yesterday and city detectives had three students summoned to the principal's office. The lads were then taken to police headquarters. They were: Tom Johnson, 1320 Tenth street, 18 years old; Herbert Marshall, 1546 Second street, 18 years old; Lonnie Ringenberg, 1513 Washington street, 17 years old.

The three youths were arrested by orders of Chief of Detectives MacDonald for investigation in connection with the recent epidemic of automobile disappearances.

Their arrest followed the alleged confession of three other lads in the office of the chief of detectives, yesterday morning. These youths, who were taken at their room at 512 High street, are Lawrence Miller, 18 years old, Louis Fletcher, 19, Lee Snyder, 18.

According to the detective chief, Miller made a clean breast to him and told in detail of the operations in the past 10 days of a band of seven youths who have taken automobiles from the streets, ridden around in them, and left them later.

BANKERS WILL SUPPORT REYNOLDS FOR RE-ELECTION

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 6.—The national banks of Des Moines will unanimously support George M. Reynolds for re-election as a member of the Chicago federal reserve bank board, it is thought. Notice has been received by the local institutions that Mr Reynolds' term expires soon, and that nominations are in order and must be into the regional institution by December 1.

Each bank must appoint an elector to represent it in the elections, and also to name a candidate for whom this elector shall vote. The Citizens' National bank has chosen President J G. Rounds to represent it and the Des Moines National bank has chosen J. H. Blair Mr Reynolds will be the nominee of both banks.

TRIPLE WEDDING CEREMONY AT IDA COUNTY COURT HOUSE

Ida Grove, Ia., Nov 6—Rev. J W Todd, of the Methodist Episcopal church in this city, was called to the clerk of court's office yesterday morning to perform a wedding ceremony and before he left the building had united three couples. The first to make their appearance was John Lahann and Miss Bessie Ashmore, who gave their address as Correctionville. Before Clerk Scott could summon a minister, William C Meyer and Miss Bertha Jessen and William Mehr and Miss Hannah Meyer made application for a double wedding. They were introduced to the first couple and all decided that they would make it a triplicate affair Clerk Scott was ordered to get the preliminaries in shape. All of the young people interested come of excellent families in the northern part of the county

SOCIAL WORKER CRITICIZES CARELESS USE OF PENSIONS

Council Bluffs, Ia, Nov 6—For the purpose of studying the sociological problems that confront Council Bluffs charitable organizations and helping them find solutions and remedies for abuses, Miss Bessie McClenahan, of Des Moines, member of the Bureau of Social Welfare of the extension division of Iowa State university, has spent two days here, making a preliminary survey She returned to Des Moines last evening, but will come here on Monday and spend whatever time is required for a careful stury of the situation and solution of the problems it presents. In the course of her inquiries she took occasion to denounce the mothers' pension law She has been investigating it in various parts of the state and finds that it is not bringing about the good results hoped for

"It is being generally abused, despite the great care taken by juvenile court judges to prevent it" said Miss McClenahan "It has undoubtedly done much good and its purpose is splendid but the money paid out is not always wisely used."

VERY LITTLE GOOD CORN IN NORTHEASTERN SECTION

Mason City Ia., Nov 6.—There is a whole lot of corn in this section of the state that has very little value to it. In the fields it is so water soaked that much of it is now turning black Those who are posted state that as soon as the ear freezes it will have practically no value Some who have been feeding corn to cattle and hogs say that it has but very little fattening value. Supt B F Van Vleit, of the Iowa and Dakota division of the C, M. & St. P. railway, said today that this condition in the corn crop prevails all along the line from Calmar west to Spencer West of Spencer from 40 to 50 per cent of the crop is marketable and the remainder is making fair feed. The same condition largely prevails on the Iowa and Minnesota division of the road On the H & D. division and the S. & H. division, corn is better and large quantities of grain is moving.

OFFICIAL FIGURES ON PRINCIPAL IOWA CITIES

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 6—The official census figures for 1915, on principal Iowa cities, have been compiled As in 1910 Sioux City holds an easy second place, 13,633 above Davenport, which is next in line. BUTLER TRIED FIRST ON ALLEGATIONS OF INSANITY

Fort Dodge, Ia., Nov 4—Upon the filing of affidavits by Dr. M N Volding, former superintendent of the state insane hospital at Cherokee, and Dr Hill, of Des Moines, which stated the opinion that John Butler, on trial for the murder of George Sullivan, a young farmer was at this time insane Judge H E Fry of the district court, sustained the motion brought under an almost forgotten statute of the Iowa laws, to first try the accused man for insanity before a jury If found insane, Butler will be sent to Anamosa and housed with the criminally insane.

MAN MISSING SINCE JUNE RETURNS WITH MELODRAMATIC TALE

Says He Was Beaten By Unknown Persons and Suffered Long Lapse of Memory.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Nov. 5.—Andrew Boles, who disappeared under mysterious circumstances, June 24, while working on a farm near Marion, returned today and tells a thrilling story. He says that the day before his disappearance he received a letter asking him to meet a friend on a highway near Marion. He went to the spot designated on horseback and claims three men leaped upon him, beat him into unconsciousness, bound him and threw him in a Milwaukee freight car at Marion. When he recovered consciousness he was in Ottumwa, but his memory was a blank.

Since that time he has worked on farms in Nebraska and South Dakota and regained his memory a few days ago. His father, who lived in Galena, Kan., has been in Marion since June, conducting a search.

Young Boles was engaged to marry a young woman living near Marion at the time of his disappearance.

FEDERATION WOMEN ARE IN SESSION AT SAC CITY

Sac City, Ia., Nov 5—The Eleventh district of the Iowa Federation of Women's clubs opened convention activities last evening with a reception to delegates in the home of Mrs. George B. Perkins, chairman of the local biennial board.

The meetings today were devoted to sessions for committees and reports of committee chairmen

Dr R H S. Sylvester, of the state university, will discuss "The Mental Health of the Child," at this evening's meeting. An art exhibit and illustrated lecture on art by Mrs. Burton A. Morrow, of Sioux City, will be another feature of the evening session today.

The meeting will continue tomorrow and close tomorrow evening.

A new exhibit of American artists owned by the state commission is in charge of Mrs F D. Force.

Tomorrow's program will include the address of the state president, Mrs. Francis E. Whitley.

RELIEF MEASURE PROPOSED FOR OVERWORKED STUDENTS

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 5.—If the Iowa State Teachers' association adopts the recommendation of one of its special committees, school children in this state will not have to learn cube root, exchange, the metric system, long division of fractions, more than one system for computing interest, progressions, apothecaries weight, decimals beyond three figures and a lot of other hard parts of arithmetic. Neither will they be required to learn to spell correctly more than 1,000 words and a lot of things in geography and history and physiology which they must now know.

It became known yesterday that the committee would recommend a considerable reduction in the work given Iowa school children. The committee, of which G M. Wilson, of Ames, was chairman, will make its report to the educational council Thursday morning at the auditorium

ATTORNEY GENERAL ASSAILS IOWA LOAN AGENT LAW

Council Bluffs, Ia., Nov 5—Attorney General Cosson, candidate for the republican gubernatorial nomination, delivered a speech here last night before the Republican club in which he vigorously attacked the loan agent bill passed by the legislature and outlined his position with reference to good roads

The attorney general criticised President Wilson for the partisan attitude he says the president has followed with reference to making appointments, indorsed woman suffrage, pleaded for the return of bull moosers to the republican camp, and declared himself in favor of a "sane but fearless enforcement of liquor laws" He also came out for home rule and advocated the putting to work of the 30,000 prisoners in the state institutions on custodial farms

MAYOR HANNA CLAIMS OLD IOWA LAW CRIME AGAINST ALL CITIES

Legislature Will Be Asked to Repeal Measure Granting Phone Franchises.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 4.—A fight in the legislature is forecast as a result of the decision given by the supreme court Saturday that the Iowa Telephone company holds a perpetual franchise to operate in Des Moines. Corporation Counsel Byers said yesterday that the city would ask the legislature to repeal the act by virtue of which the supreme court says the company has a right to do business without interference from the city.

The supreme court stated that the authority was granted in 1888 and that it is up to the legislature to revoke it.

"As Justice Weaver said in his dissenting opinion," said Mr. Byers, "the cities of the state are left in an outrageous position because of the law of 1888.

"It works out to give corporations organized before 1897 the rights to the streets and alleys in any city in the state without a franchise, while those organized since have to secure a franchise.

The supreme court's decision is of wide importance as it not only establishes the status of the Iowa Telephone company in Des Moines, but in every municipality in the state where the corporation was organized prior to 1897.

It was claimed by the city during its fight to compel the Iowa Telephone company to secure a franchise that an act of 1897 requiring companies organized thereafter to secure franchise revoked the authority granted the company by the legislature in 1888. The supreme court did not take this view.

"The old law perpetrates a crime against the cities of the state," was the mayor's comment this morning." The mayor and the corporation counsel conferred this morning on the city's position since the opinion was handed down.

"The decision has settled a mooted question," said Mr. Byers. "It has established legally that the company has a perpetual right to the streets and alleys under the old statute.

"The ruling, however, has one bright side for the city. The supreme court, while maintaining the company's right, also declared the city's right to regulate and tax. That is of the utmost importance."

FIRE FIGHTERS REMOVE BURNING HAY FROM BARN

Cherokee, Ia., Nov. 4.—Neighboring farmers and members of the Cherokee fire department performed a remarkable fire fighting feat at the farm home of Frank Lindsay, 14 miles southeast of Cherokee. The hay in a large mow had taken fire, endangering the barn and other buildings. After subduing the flames to some extent with water and chemicals the volunteer workers removed about 25 tons of burning hay, thus saving the buildings. On being removed from the mow the smouldering hay was loaded onto wagons and hurriedly taken out to the pasture, where it soon burst into flames again.

IOWA AD CLUBS MEET IN CEDAR RAPIDS NEXT YEAR

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 4.—The first day of the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of Iowa closed last night with Cedar Rapids chosen as the place of meeting for 1916, with R. E. Choate, of the Laplant-Choate Manufacturing company, of Cedar Rapids, elected president; C. E. Forkner, president of the Lifht Draft Harrow company, of Marshalltown, vice president; D. M. Grove, of Nevada, secretary, and Frank Throop, of Davenport, treasurer.

The first meeting of the convention was held in the afternoon, when H. J. Kennock, secretary of the national vigilance committee, told of the campaign being carried on by the association to rid the country of the advertising fakir

The convention was presided over by T W La Quatte, of Des Moines, president, and addresses of welcome were delivered by Gov. George W. Clarke, Mayor James R. Hanna and B. F Williams, president of the Des Moines chamber of commerce.

VICTIMS OF RAZOR DUEL ARE LIKELY TO RECOVER

Mason City, Ia., Nov. 4.—While both Mr and Mrs. D. C. Jordan made "death bed" statements in regard to the razor duel in their sleeping room, it is now believed that both will recover unless something unexpected transpires. The husband is at the Park hospital resting quite comfortably, considering the ugly slash that just escaped the juglar vein. His wife is at the Story hospital. She was cut about the throat, her face and arms were badly haggled and she has an ugly wound in the forehead.

Mrs. Jordan made a lengthy statement, claiming her husband wanted her to sign a document and she refused to do it. She said he struck her, jumped upon her, seized a razor and proceeded to use it vigorously. Finally, she said, she seized the razor and broke it in her efforts to protect herself. The baby she had in her arms was not injured. She admits cutting him, but said she did it in self defense.

When Jordan thought he was going to die he dictated a telegram to his mother, stating "marriage is a failure. The woman cut my throat. My insurance is made out to you."

TO TEST CITY LIABILTY IN DISTRICT COURT CASE

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 4.—The question of whether the city of Des Moines is required under the law to pay both a pension and workmen's compensation to injured police and firemen or their widows in the event they are killed in accidents will be put up to the Polk county district court.

This was decided at a hearing yesterday before Industrial Commissioner Garst at the state house. The city of Des Moines, through its solicitor, Eskil Carlson, was called upon to show cause why the city had not complied with the workmen's compensation act. The industrial commissioner has been threatening to revoke the permit of Des Moines to carry its own insurance.

URICK NOT SATISFIED WITH CHILD LABOR CONDITIONS

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 2.—State Labor Commissioner Urick called a conference yesterday afternoon among his inspectors to start an educational campaign with respect to the law passed by the last legislature regulating the employment of child labor.

Urick says the law is being violated in several of the larger cities in Iowa by persons empowered to issue permits to children under certain conditions He has called upon his inspectors to explain the law to those persons who have exceeded their authority and at the same time warn them they must cease or they will be prosecuted

RUMORED HEAD OF BRITISH ARMY IS TO RESIGN OFFICE

Some Reports Have It Resignation Has Been Turned In and Soon Will Be Accepted.

STATEMENTS ARE DENIED

War Lord Said to Have Gone to Near East—Does Not Appear on New Cabinet Committee

London Nov 6 It was officially announced this evening that Field Marshal Earl Kitchener had gone to the eastern theater of war

The official statement reads

'Earl Kitchener at the request of his colleagues has left England for a short visit to the eastern theater of war"

London Nov 8 The morning newspapers devote considerable space to speculation in regard to war office affairs, but beyond the brief official announcement that Premier Asquith is in charge, temporarily no authoritative information has been given out

The Post says that Earl Kitchener secretary for war, has been entrusted with an important mission to the near east, and already has departed from London.

"It is generally believed," says the Post, "that Earl Kitchener's business will necessitate a stay so prolonged that it will be necessary to fill his place at the war office before long It is true that he has not resigned but the importance of his present errand makes it certain that his resignation is only delayed

"The suggestion has been made that Lord Haldane be brought back to the war office but this probably is unfounded"

Resignation Denied

Reiteration of the report that Earl Kitchener had placed his resignation as secretary of state for war in the hands of the king has brought forth an official report to the contrary

The policy of the British government in respect of both the Dardanelles expedition and the Serbian campaign has been subjected to severe criticism in England, and if the statement of the Post is correct the war secretary presumably has been sent to the near east to determine by personal inspection the proper policy for Great Britain or to supervise some movement of importance already decided upon.

According to the Daily Graphic Earl Kitchener saw the king Thursday night as was announced yesterday at the king's own request

The Graphic, urging the government not to delay disclosure of the actual facts, suggests that Lord Derby who is now in charge of British recruiting, would make an excellent war minister

The new war council which Premier Asquith announced in the house of commons on November 2 would conduct the war, held its first meeting yesterday It consisted of the premier, A J Balfour, first lord of the admiralty David Lloyd-George minister of munitions, and Sir Edward Grey foreign secretary Three members of the cabinet conferred with the various military and naval experts

When Premier Asquith announced that a cabinet committee of from three to five members would be named to take charge of Great Britain's military operations, it was taken for granted that Lord Kitchener, secretary of war, would be one of the members. The fact that he was not present at the first meeting may have been due to his absence from London. Rumors of his resignation as war secretary and that he would take command of the army in France have been officially denied

CARRANZA SOUNDS DOOM OF GRAFTER

Poor to Be Given Chance—Capital to Get No Privileges —Clergy Must Stay Out of Politics.

San Antonio, Tex., Nov 8.—Capital, the clergy and special privilege, their part in the life of Mexico and the attitude toward them of the constitutionalist party formed the theme of a statement given out in Piedras Negras today by Gen. Venustiano Carranza, head of the defacto government of Mexico. The statement follows in part:

"There are to be no more special privileges There will be no confiscation of property, however, merely because it belongs to wealthy persons. Public lands are to be cut up and sold to the poor at moderate prices and on easy terms.

"There will be no persecution of Catholics, but the clergy will have to abstain from politics.

"American capital is invited to come to Mexico, but without the promise of privilege.

"The railroads will continue to be operated by the military forces during the period of pacification, after which they will be turned back to the corporations which own them."

BEAT DAN CUPID? IT CAN'T BE DONE

Wisconsin University Heads Advice Boys How To Keep Out of Love.

Madison, Wis Nov 8 The faculty of the University of Wisconsin has warned students against letting Cupid interfere with their studies. Professor Lurlan Martin of the psychological department, therefore has issued anti-love recipes, of which the following are typical "Cut out social events, if you have any tend not to fall in love.

If you are affected by any romantic location cut that part of the campus from your acquaintance.

"Stay away from the things that excite your love whatever they may be."

The university grounds around the shore of Lake Mendota are known by men and women as the ideal spot for love making, but the faculty believes that although they themselves have listened in numerous instances to the love call of Mendota-in-the-spring, it is better for studies that love be let alone

CONDUCT OF ITALY STIRS SUSPICIONS

Refusal to Send Troops Into Balkans and Proposal to Resume German Trade Look Queer.

London Nov 8—The refusal of Italy to send troops to the Balkans and the proposal by Italy to resume certain trade relations with Germany, have led to much speculation in diplomatic circles. Italy and Germany never have declared war on each other Inasmuch as there is apparently no quarrel between them, it is assumed that Italy will not precipitate matters by fighting the Germans directly A Rome dispatch says

In some well informed quarters, it is thought that when Italy denounced the triple alliance and joined the entente allies, she made a declaration to the entente that her participation in the war was limited to fighting Austria-Hungary, with the object of conquering Italian provinces still subject to Austrian rule, at the same time stating that she did not wish to extend hostilities to Germany This situation, it is pointed out, might enable the two countries to help each other in given cases"

What Is Italy's Game?

The speculative theory also is advanced that Italy, being in no position, geographically, to lend military or naval assistance to Germany and Austria and her eastwhile allies being in no position to assist her in the event of an attack by the Anglo-French, Italy went into the war on the side of the entente allies, with a complete understanding with Germany as to what her course should be There always has been bad blood between Austria and Italy Germany had no interest in that quarrel There is a growing conviction that the Tyrol-Isonzo campaign is being conducted on a cut and dried plan, agreed to by both sides.

Cadorna Blocks Move.

Italy's participation in the Balkan campaign has been frustrated by Lieutenant General Cadorna, chief of the Italian general staff, according to Rome advices. One dispatch says.

"Opinion here is divided concerning the conduct of the war, especially as regards a Balkan expedition. Lieutenant General Count Cadorna's iron will has triumphed in this respect. He said he would rather resign as chief of the general staff than allow a part of his troops to participate in a Balkan undertaking, and his view was finally adopted by the minister of war and the entire cabinet."

The dispatch further relates there is a division of opinion in the Italian cabinet as to the conduct of the war At a recent meeting of the ministers one is said to have suggested that the best interests of Italy could be conserved by assisting a movement toward the restoration of peace. This provoked an outburst, it is said, and the good faith of the minister was questioned Epithets were engaged in and one minister is reported to have thrown a book at another The incident is said to have been largely of a personal nature.

Plan to Resume Trade.

Concerning the resumption of trade relations with German a Rome dispatch says

"Existing returns between Italy and Germany again are a subject of interest among Italian political observers, owing to the lack of a declaration of war upon either side and because both countries seemingly are avoiding anything which might embitter their intercourse.

"Reports from Berlin say that several thousand Italian workmen still are living in Germany unmolested and enjoying the thorough protection of the authorities, while many Germans continue to reside in Italy without suffering any injury.

"What is more remarkable in the opinion of prominent Italians, is that negotiations are actually taking place with a view to an exchange between the two countries of certain products which do not bear directly on the war."

Berlin, (via London), Nov 8—The prediction that the Serbian campaign will be ended in two or three weeks is made by M Toncheff, Bulgarian minister of finance, in an interview published today by the Tageblatt Every one in Bulgaria, M. Toncheff said, expects to regain the old Bulgarian territory, for which the nation fought in the Balkan war

Berlin, (by wireless to Sayville), Nov 8 -The capture of Nish, Serbia, by the Bulgarians was announced officially here today

With the exception of Belgrade, Nish is the largest city in Serbia. Soon after the outbreak of the war the capital was transferred from Belgrade to Nish. There the government remained until the city was threatened by the invaders In the last month various towns have been mentioned as the temporary seat of the government.

Nish is situated on the main railroad line of Serbia, running from Belgrade to Saloniki There are no recent statistics of its population, which 20 years ago was 21,500.

Hold Half of Serbia.

More than half of Serbia is now in possession of the invaders, who also have taken the greater part of the country's railroad system. The new junction, effected between Austro-Germand and Bulgarian forces, reported by Berlin today, completes the semicircular wall of hostile armies about the retreating Serbians. It is said in Berlin that het Serbians have an open line of less than 70 miles for retreat in Montenegro. Should they seek refuge in that country they would be menaced by Austrian forces, which already have begun an attack along the northern and western Montenegrin frontiers

Amsterdam, (via London), Nov 6.—A telegram from a Sofia news agency says that one Bulgarian division has entered the Serbian city of Nish.

Rome, (via Paris), Nov 6—The total Bulgarian losses in Serbia are estimated at 80,000, says an Athens dispatch to the Giornale D'Italia, which recounts the capture of Babuna gorge and Izvor by Serbian and French troops.

Anxiety is being caused in Sofia, the dispatch asserts, by the increasingly energetic resistance of the Serbs in the eastern theater.

Berlin, (by wireless to Sayville), Nov 6.—Capture of Varvarin, on the Morava river in Serbia, about 40 miles northwest of Nish, was announced today by the German war office. More than 3,000 Serbians were taken prisoners.

The town of Kralievo, 35 miles southwest of Kraguyevatz, also has been captured by the Germans, who are pursuing the Serbians to the east of that point.

The Germans have reached the Zupanyevac district and in the Morava valley have pursued the Serbians beyond Obrezsicirica.

Take Few Prisoners.

The Bulgarian conquest of Nish was effected after three days of heavy fighting. In these engagements the Bulgarians captured 350 Serbians and two cannon.

Near Lukovo, the Bulgarians defeated the Serbians and in the vicinity of Sokobanya also they won a victory, taking more than 500 prisoners and six cannon. Bulgarian and German forces got in touch with each other near Krivivir.

VESSEL SET ON FIRE HER CAPTAIN THINKS

Sugar Ship Fired By Incendiary Bomb—Blaze Under Control.

Halifax, N. S., Nov. 8.—The fire in the cargo of sugar on the steamer Rio Lages, which put in here late last night with the flames still smouldering, was caused by an incendiary bomb, according to a statement today by Captain Bell, of the steamer. The fire is now virtually out after having been fought with steam and water continuously since it was discovered early Thursday, the fourth day out from New York.

Captain Bell said the cargo, which was consigned to the British sugar commission at Queenstown, had been loaded by Austrian and German stevedores at Yonkers, N. Y., and that there was ample opportunity for a spy to place an incendiary bomb in the sugar bags. He added that spontanous combustion in such a cargo as his vessel carried was almost unknown.

WILSON SENDS REGRETS.

Washington, Nov. 6.—President Wilson today sent a telegram to the father of Mario Passi, the boy who yesterday fell in front of the president's automobile and was slightly injured in New York, expressing solicitude and regret.

I Recommend Peruna To All Sufferers Of Catarrh—

I Do Not Think I Ever Felt Much Better

Mrs. William H. Hinchliffe, No. 20 Myrtle St., Beverly, Mass., writes: "I have taken four bottles of Peruna, and I can say that it has done me a great deal of good for catarrh of the head and throat. I recommend Peruna to all sufferers with catarrh. I do not think I ever felt much better. I am really surprised at the work I can do. I do not think too much praise can be said for Peruna."

Our booklet, telling you how to keep well, free to all.

Those who object to liquid medicines can now procure Peruna Tablets.

IN A RAIN OF FIRE

Australian Tells of Landing on Gallipoli Peninsula.

Turkish Soldiers Tested the Metal of Colonial Troops Who Sought to Press Forward to the Sultan's Capital.

"A sea, smooth as a mirror, covered with a light mist," so relates an Australian, "and beyond great hills and faint outlines of battleships and transports, overhead a hydroplane lurking about the Turkish position, such was the spectacle presented to us on April 25, when we approached the Gallipoli peninsula. Our run was straight forward to the shore toward the foot of Gaba Tepe hill, but the destroyer, it must be understood, was unable to bring us close to the beach. There we lay in an open boat, looking at each other in a puzzled way, while bullets came whizzing past right and left and over us. At last the barges were advanced as much as possible. We quickly jumped into the water, almost to our armpits, and arrived, half swimming, half wading, at the shore. In former times I have often been inquisitive to know how it felt to be in a desperate position. Now I have found that out. I felt as if someone had delivered a terrible blow at my chest with the flat part of a spade.

"We passed the first-aid stations, which already were overburdened with stretchers bearing wounded. Then came a toilsome, tiring climb over great sand dunes to the firing line. Snipers lay concealed everywhere in ambush and bullets struck all around in the rocks and bushes. In this way, surrounded by a thousand dangers, we reached the line of fire, where I was detached from my company for duty to ascertain the shooting ranges for an Australian regiment. Through the excellent telescope of my rangefinder I could observe the Turkish retreat and had even a tiny picture of a bayonet charge of our own men. Still came the wounded in seemingly unending streams, then our trench awoke to life. One of the sharpshooters seemed to have a grudge against the rangefinder, as two bullets struck the immediate breastworks; the man next to me suddenly reared up high and fell to my feet. 'At an end,' he cried, and then added, faintly hesitating, 'money in belt—wife and children—' The Turks had evidently got our range, then the situation became more and more uncomfortable, and those of us who were left had to shift our positions several hundred yards to the rear, until it was finally possible to silence this dangerous marksman.

"On the following afternoon I directed again my glass on this tragic group and saw that the sailor now lay on his back, his face pointing toward heaven. Without a doubt yesterday he was alive and may have been even now after 36 hours still living. And now it shot more violently through my being. In the midst of the group I observed a movement and saw plainly a man extricating himself and slowly hobbling along the bank. With four other I set out to rescue the unfortunate, who in the meantime had collapsed. We found yet four others living and heard from them that last night there had still been eight of them.

"To our right rattled a hostile machine gun like a motor cycle and came gradually nearer. A navalplane from its mothership, Arck Royal, anchored in the nearby bay, hovered over our heads encircled by white shrapnel cloudlets, coming from the Turks. Soon thereafter the flyer turned about and flew back to make a report. The effect of this was not long in waiting, it came in shape of a ship's shell, which with ear-benumbing screech flew over our heads. Far from us rose a cloud of smoke and earth, gradually dispersing. Now the guns from the ships began in earnest. From the bay came an uninterrupted thundering, and the whizzing of the heavy projectiles, as a '6' battery fired one salvo after another. Brown smoke ascended from the hostile bulwarks and for a long time thereafter the hills trembled with the long-drawn-out thunder of the explosions.

"Now, cannon of the enemy began to reply, shrapnel burst over us, and the whistling of the flying bullets seemed to be all about us. For three hours lasted this violent cannonade. We were now solidly intrenched, however, with very heavy sacrifices. Behind us on the beach were brought up gradually supplies; horses and mules came to land, and the reserve ammunition steadily accummulated. Men carried water, munitions and oil for the machine guns to the firing line. On all paths moved the stretcher-bearers with their sad burdens and wounded patiently waited in small groups at the bandage stations. In the hot sun the surgeons worked like machines. Many wounds were beyond all help and a white cloth covered many a face. Although we were only six hours on land, three wireless stations shot up like mushrooms out of the earth, and their crackling sparks betrayed to the warships where to direct their projectiles. Incessantly new troops were unloaded, which immediately were chased to the firing line.

"With the beginning of darkness the bombardment subsided, but the Turkish shrapnels continued bursting over the beach and the wounded were therefore exposed to heavy shrapnel fire. Also, the nerve-destroying rifle fire would not cease. Of sleep no one could think and the digging of trenches had to be taken in hand at once, in order to fortify our position. To our left, distant about a half mile, a lonely boat rocked in the surf; with help of my glass I could determine its load. At least eight dead sat upright therein and near at the beach lay a further 20 men. A seaman, who could be identified by his white cap, lay there in a remarkable lifelike position, his chin supported by his hand.

Fashion Fixes the Price.

That fashion and not intrinsic value skyrockets the price of fancy weaves was recently acknowledged by a cotton manufacturer. He was speaking of "gabardine," the season's favorite.

"Why, do you know," he said, "it's the same old imitation cotton serge that we've been making and selling to retailers in small towns in the South and West for years? It never would 'go' in the large cities, but now that it's been given this new French name of the woolen goods so popular this spring, we can't make enough of it. Naturally, when the supply gets short, the price goes up. It's our chance—and the retailer's—and we both take it."

This is an excellent illustration of the way in which ignorance of the real value of a fabric plays the buyer into the hand of the merchant.—Beatrice Denison, in Good Housekeeping.

Great Men Unrewarded.

The world . . . has ever, we fear, shown but small favor to its teachers, hunger and nakedness, perils and reviling, the prison, the cross, the poison chalice have, in most times and countries, been the market price it has offered for wisdom, the welcome with which it was greeted those who have come to enlighten and purify it. Homer and Socrates and the Christian apostles belong to old days; but the world's martyrology was not completed with these. Roger Bacon and Galileo languish in priestly dungeons; Tasso pines in the cell of a madhouse; Camoens dies begging on the streets of Lisbon.

Not So Easy.

"My doctor tells me I ought to go south for the winter."

"Well, why don't you go?"

"He doesn't tell me how to raise the money."

TURN OVER TIME
When Nature Hints About the Food.

When there's no relish to food and all that one eats doesn't seem to do any good then is the time to make a turn-over in the diet, for that's Nature's way of dropping a hint that the food isn't the kind required.

"For a number of years I followed railroad work, much of it being office work of a trying nature. Meal times were our busiest; and eating too much and too quickly of food such as is commonly served in hotels and restaurants, together with the sedentary habits, were not long in giving me dyspepsia and stomach trouble which reduced my weight from 205 to 160 pounds.

"There was little relish in any food and none of it seemed to do me any good. It seemed the more I ate the poorer I got and was always hungry before another meal, no matter how much I had eaten.

"Then I commenced a trial of Grape-Nuts food, and was surprised how a small saucer of it would carry me along, strong, and with satisfied appetite, until the next meal, with no sensations of hunger, weakness or distress as before.

"I have been following this diet now for several months and my improvement has been so great all the others in my family have taken up the use of Grape-Nuts with complete satisfaction and much improvement in health.

"Most people eat hurriedly, have lots of worry, thus hindering digestion and therefore need a food that is predigested and concentrated in nourishment."

"There's a Reason."

Why Pay the Peddler or Canvasser Twice These Prices?

You can save a good deal of money by buying your stock tonic at this store, instead of paying the peddler big, fancy prices for goods of unknown quality. Look at these prices for that old reliable and guaranteed stock conditioner and worm expeller—

Dr. Hess Stock Tonic
25-lb. pail costs $1.60
100-lb. sack costs $5.00

Why pay the peddler twice these prices? Dr. Hess Stock Tonic is highly concentrated and will go as far as any preparation, no matter what price you pay. Dr. Hess & Clark, of Ashland, Ohio, manufacturers of the famous Dr. Hess line, do not have to pay for expense of horse, wagon and peddler; that's the reason they can sell their products to you through this store at rock-bottom prices. You can get your money back right here if any Dr. Hess preparations doesn't do what is claimed for it.—

ALONG RUTH CAME

"Did you ever see such seams in anything as those in Marguerite's chiffon blouse?" asked Ruth's sister, when they had returned from an afternoon party.

"Oh they are horrible! And they could have been made so straight and nice too, by such a little bit of extra trouble. Somebody told me how to do this sort of seaming last week. You put a strip of paper under all soft materials like silk mousselaine, chiffon, etc., when sewing them on a machine. You sew through paper and all, and while it does not hurt your fabric in the least, it keeps your seams from puckering and pulling and makes them straight and firm. Then when the seam is completed the paper can be torn away.

"It's a grand thing to have something in one's head besides nonsense," answered the sister, "I think Margos seams are crooked because of that very thing."

HEAVY MEAT EATERS HAVE SLOW KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have bladder trouble—Take glass of Salts.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys, they become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood, then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

"I wuz out a little late t'other n'ght" remarked the Sage as he made a deposit in the bank, "an' I wuz surprised at the number of young fellers I seen on th' streets. Warn't doin' nothin', jest lollin'. Why, when I wuz a young feller we used to be gone somewhere every night, to a spellin' bee or a speakin' society 'er singin' skule 'er somethin' to improve our minds. War'nt none of us layin' 'round on th' streets till late at night tryin' to figger out some devilment. Young fellers ought tuh have some place to spend their evenin's now-a-days."

"That's just what a number of us have been thinking" was the cashier's reply. "We are raising funds to build a nice Y. M. C. A., where the young men of the town can have clean recreation and amusement any time they want it. I suppose we can count on you for a check to help the work along."

"No sir-ee," was the response. "Th' skule house insta be good 'nuff fer us old timers and it's good 'nuff fer young fellers now. 'Sides if th' young men want somethin' like that they ought tuh pay fer it themselves."

ADVISE FARMERS TO SORT CORN

Big Difference in Price Between High Grade and Low Grade Corn Warrants Sorting of the Crop.

"It will pay big to sort all corn that does not contain over one-fourth soft ears," says P. C. Taff of the extension department of Iowa State college. "Under the present system of market grading, 4 damaged ears in a bushel will make otherwise No. 2 corn grade No. 3, while 10 ears or 10 per cent bad corn will make it No. 5 corn."

Mr. Taff gives this advice after a thorough study of the corn situation throughout the state. He says there will be a big difference in price between high grade and low grade corn because of the scarcity of the former, hence the advisability of sorting.

Sorting can best be done by building a platform several feet wide on the side of the crib, on which a load or more of corn can be shoveled by the huskers. The owner can then shovel this corn into the crib between loads and sort it as he does so. This does away with depending upon hired help for this important work. If an unloading elevator is being used, one or more men can catch the soft ears as they go up.

Plenty of ventilators placed in the cribs are also suggested to help dry the corn.

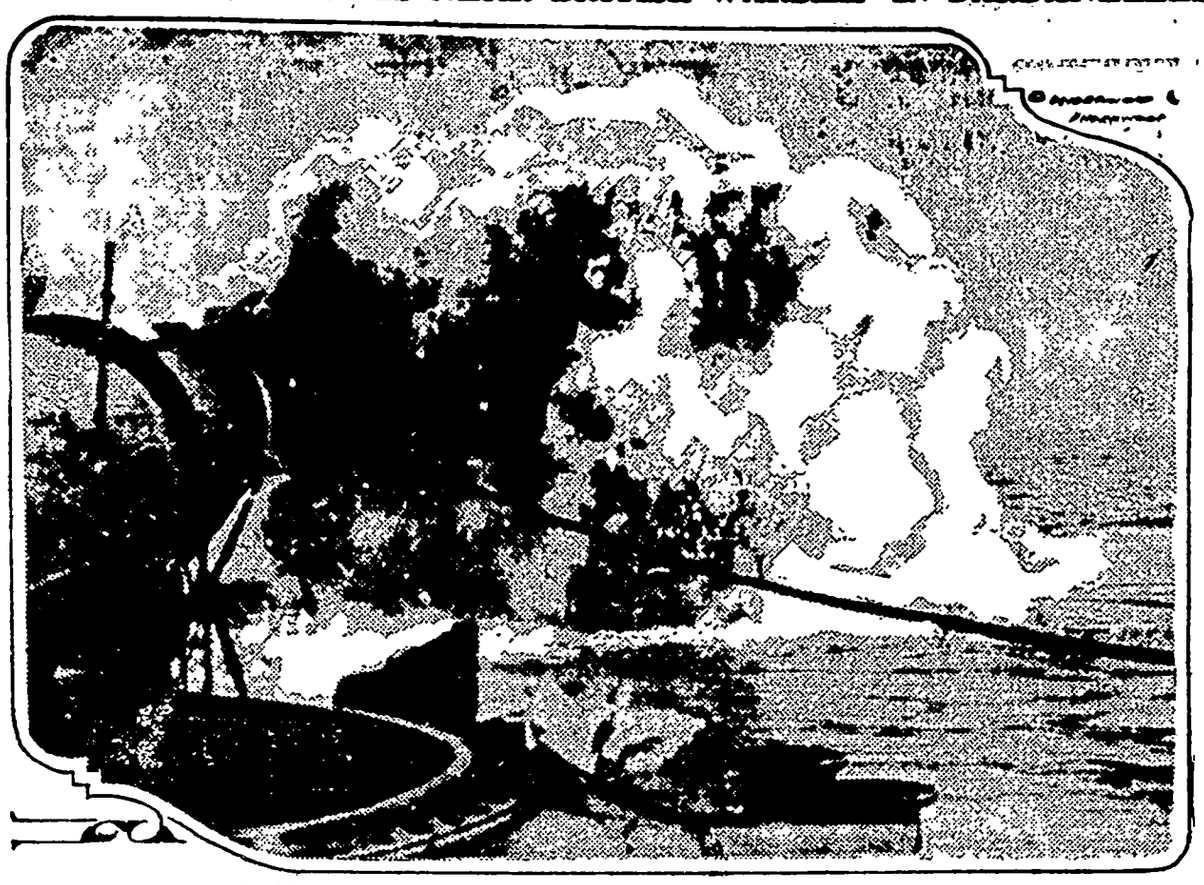
TURK MINE EXPLODES NEAR BRITISH WARSHIP IN DARDANELLES



Turkish mine exploding in Dardanelles near British torpedo boat destroyer.

One of the reasons assigned for the failure of the allied fleet to continue its advance in the Dardanelles was the constant stream of floating mines let loose by the Turks. This unusual picture shows a Turkish mine exploding close to the stern of a British torpedo boat destroyer. If the mine had exploded underneath the destroyer another vessel would have been added to those destroyed in the effort to smash through the Dardanelles.

"Factory" Canned Goods Safer Than Old Fashioned Kind

(Harry E. Barnard, State Food and Drug Commissioner of Indiana, in the Philadelphia North American.)

When one can choose between tomatoes ripe from the field and tomatoes obtained with a can opener, between milk warm from the dairy and the syrupy concentrate from the factory, between the sweet peas shelled crisp from the pod and peas packed in Wisconsin or Indiana and opened months later 1,000 miles away, the fresh gathered product is, of course, the better

No fruit is ever so good as when picked in one's own garden, and no milk is ever so sweet or so rich as when freshly drawn; but we cannot all have gardens, and even when we do have them, the crop is soon gathered. Nor is milk fresh from its fount possible to more than a limited and fortunate few Of course, the epicure, who values his appetite more than his money, can get his hothouse grown fruits and vegetables and prolong the season for fresh foods by depending on supplies gathered in many zones and held in refrigeration to serve his needs.

But the tin can kitchen must satisfy our desire for early June peas at least 11 months in the year The pantry shelves stacked with canned beans, corn, tomatoes, peas, fruits and vegetables of every description offer no mean substitutes for fresh products. Indeed, in many cases the goods from the can are more juicy and palatable than the stale and wilted, half ripe, so-called fresh products.

The art of canning is but a little more than 100 years old, dating back to the discoveries of Nicholas Appert, who found that he could put all kinds of food in little glass or tin storehouses and hold it there indefinitely, and who first tested the value of his process by serving green peas and beans, gathered more than a year earlier, to the admiral and officers of a French frigate, and so won their approval that the invention was brought to the attention of the French government, and by it given its first official recognition. In these 100 years, and especially in the last 10 years, the canning industry has made astonishing strides. No food is now so rare or unusual that it is not preserved for future consumption in tin cans.

The once common belief that canned goods contained preservatives and other gross adulterants has been shown to be false, and the reports of chemists who in every state and many cities, check food frauds, show that no foods on the pantry shelves are less liable to adulteration than those in the tin package.

Canned foods are not preserved by chemicals because they are made sterile by heat, the safest, cheapest and altogether the best way of saving food in good condition until the time it may be needed.

In the tin package there is no deterioration and no waste. Wheat in the elevator or granary may become damp and moldy, and it is always subject to attack by rats and insects.

Tin Cans the Best Storage.

Food in cold storage has a definite life limit, but food in the can stays good so long as the tin package lasts. Canners are modern Josephs, storing up a surplus in ideal warehouses against times of scarcity, and when the brethren descend on the unprepared housewife there are always tinned foods on hand to avert the famine and load the lengthened table.

The process of canning at the factory, with its output of millions of cans yearly, is little different from that followed in the kitchen. Some of the choicest and most success factories work in small units in exactly the way the housewife "puts up" her peaches and berries; but the canner has a great advantage over the housewife in that he has larger supplies to select from, better formulas to follow and more perfect processes for sterilization; so while the housewife counts her summer labor successful if she does not lose more than one can in six, the canner is able to keep his loss from spoilage to less than one can in 100.

The housewife is proud of her rows upon rows of glass jars and neatly labeled tin cans stacked on the pantry shelves, and to her and her family no doubt the homemade jellies and preserves have a finer flavor than do the goods from the grocery stock. The difference, however, is largely that due to the natural pride of the creator, and not to any inherent superiority, for if it were possible to judge the average home made article with the output of the canner, the canner would not suffer in comparison, and, indeed, his goods would be found to be more uniform in composition and flavor and better adapted to the palate and need of consumer.

WORK, LIFE AND LOVE.

Henry Van Dyke.

WORK.

Let me but do my work from day to day,
In field or forest, at the desk or loom,
In roaring market place or tranquil room,
Let me but find it in my heart to say,
When vagrant wishes beckon me astray,
"This is my work; my blessing, not my doom;
Of all who live I am the one by whom
This work can best be done in the right way."

Then shall I see it not too great, nor small,
To suit my spirit and to prove my powers;
Then shall I cheerful greet the laboring hours,
And cheerful turn when the long shadows fall
At eventide, to play and love and rest,
Because I know for me my work is best.

LIFE.

Let me but live my life from year to year,
With forward face and unreluctant soul,
Not hurrying to, nor turning from the goal,
Not mourning for the things that disappear
In the dim past, nor holding back in fear
From what the future veils, but with a whole
And happy heart, that pays its toll
To youth and age, and travels on with cheer.

So let the way wind up the hill or down,
O'er rough or smooth, the journey will be joy,
Still seeking what I thought when but a boy,
New friendship, high adventure, and a crown,
My heart will keep the courage of the quest,
And hope the road's last turn will be the best.

LOVE.

Let me but love my love without disguise,
Nor wear a mask of fashion old or new,
Nor wait to speak till I can hear a clue
Nor play a part to shine in others' eyes,
Nor bow my knee to what my heart denies;
But what I am, to that let me be true,
And let me worship where my love is due,
And so through love and worship let me rise.

For love is but the heart's immortal thirst
To be completely known and all forgiven,
Even as sinful souls that enter heaven,
So take me, dear, and understand my worst,
And freely pardon it because confessed,
And let me find in loving thee, my best.

Germany's Food Problem.

From the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

Even more significant than the prohibition on two week days of the sale of meat, which is to go into effect this week in Germany, is the action of the imperial government in taking over the control of foodstuffs which hitherto has been left to municipal and provincial governments. It does not necessarily argue a dangerous shortage, but it does show that the food problem in Germany remains serious, and that to prepare for winter drastic measures are necessary

It is no longer merely a question of grain, on the contrary the need seems to be greatest in respect to some of the other foods which last year replaced grain to some extent Then the public was allowed to eat meat more freely than bread, now it is meat that is scarce and dear, quite as might be expected, for it is easier to grow and reap a new harvest than to replace live stock when the world markets are closed.

Nor has German efficiency yet solved the problem of equalizing the supply: the course of the imperial government is what might have been expected from the reports of neutral travelers who have told us that edicts regulating food are obeyed according to proximity to Berlin. At the Prussian capital they are given a sternly literal interpretation; in other parts of Germany more lenience has been shown. Now the mailed fist is to extend its grasp. Doubtless with more rigid regulation will go an equally energetic effort to control prices in such a way as to protect the public from extortion If the government succeeds in this it will be a notable triumph for efficiency probably in all history no great empire has ever solved that problem in a time of scarcity

While the allies must have learned by this time not to mistake foresight and careful management for a symptom of impending collapse these revelations of increasing scarcity in the German empire will encourage them to hold on and let time help fight their battles. Thrift, science and efficiency have done much for Germany, but they cannot take the place of free access to the markets of the world.

Praise Beats Faultfinding.

From the Duluth Herald.

The usual way of training a boy is by telling him what he may not do; and then he goes and does it.

And he wouldn't be worth a hang if he didn't.

Every man who has been a boy knows this, because he has illustrated it in his own experience; yet the boy who when told by his parents that he mustn't do a certain thing immediately went and did it, when he grows up and has a boy to train starts in by telling him what he mustn't do.

Yet any boy—or anybody—can be trained in the right way by being praised when he does the right thing, and taught that the right way is interesting and pleasant and better.

It's boy nature—and some people never get over it—to feel an instant desire to do the thing one is told can't and shall not be done.

It's boy nature—and human nature—when praised for doing the right thing in the right way, to keep on doing it in the way that was praised and to try to do other things in the same way.

A Pennsylvania railroad superintendent has found that it isn't boys alone that this philosophy applies to. He has found that it works out splendid results when applied to grown men.

First he noticed that no matter how much he posted in public places criticisms of the faults of employes and warnings against them, there was no reduction whatever in the commission of these errors.

Then he tried a new game. He kept the failures to himself, but whenever a man did a particularly good piece of work he posted the fact upon a bulletin board where all men could read it.

These were the immediate results: a quick drop of two-thirds in the number of men requiring discipline, and a drop of more than 70 per cent in the loss of wages through suspensions.

There is a good deal of boy nature in man nature.

The Girl Who Works.

From Collier's.

A useful woman is Miss Anne Morgan, for she does good instead of merely talking about it. But as an active friend of girls in our largest city she sometimes has something to say worth listening to—as in these remarks quoted by the New York Times.

"There is one expression that I should like to have abolished, and that is 'working girl.' I should like to have that cut out of the English language. What does it mean? Is it a matter of age, or salary, or of occupation? When does one begin to be a 'working girl' and when does one cease to be a 'working girl?'"

True talk! That phrase has certainly been overworked. The well intentioned, shortsighted reformer weeps mawkish tears over the "working girl." The sociologist fastens his second-hand statistics on her. The sex author finds her a handy little person, and adds a loose young millionaire, the love chase, stirs, and presto! there's a best seller. The cynic—on the rare occasions when he can be persuaded to take her seriously—maintains that her potentialities for evil are unlimited. The blind optimist sees her as the patient incarnation of all human virtues. Meanwhile the working girl herself calmly surveys all this to-do, quietly laughs, and goes on sawing wood. She knows she isn't always supersubtilized or misjudged. O. Henry understood her:

"When you come to the kind of girl she was, you'll find a belt of 'em reaching from the Brooklyn bridge west as far as the court house in Council Bluffs, Ia. They earn their own living in stores, restaurants, factories, and offices. . . . They're chummy and honest and free and tender and sassy, and they look life straight in the eye."

After all, the much misunderstood "working girl" is nothing but the girl who works. Soon or late the world will grasp this simple fact, and will also realize that the girl who works is a good deal happier than the girl who plays. And not a bit harder to understand.

The Transforming Gasoline Engine.

From the Kansas City Star

The discovery of the North Pole Rear Admiral Peary at Portland, Me., recently classed with "three great recent deeds." The other two were flying and the Panama canal.

Nobody need quarrel with the selection. But there is a "great deed" of the last few years that has exercised a transforming force on civilization far greater than those mentioned, important as they are. The development of the gasoline engine, which has made possible flying, the automobile, the farm tractor and good roads, is undoubtedly the greatest recent mechanical achievement.

The motor car is coming in such numbers as to transform the mode of life and recreation of millions of persons. It is making possible a suburban development that otherwise would have been out of the question. It is going to revolutionize farm life. It is going to do this not only on the social side, in bringing the farmer's family into touch with the neighbors, but also on the business side, in new ways of marketing produce.

Behind the goods roads movement is the gasoline engine. If farmers were not getting motor cars they would not be voting bonds for good roads. Instead they would be devoting themselves to getting trolleys. The automobile, with hard surface roads, makes it possible for every farmer to have his own trolley line—only it is a gasoline line.

In addition, the farm tractor is only at the beginning of its development. The gasoline engine is becoming the great source of power for electrical installations and other kinds of farm activities.

Has any mechanical advance affected the lives of so many persons in the last 15 years as the perfecting of the gasoline engine?

Things Worth While.

Look at a sunset once in a while,
Hark to a birdsong, watch the smile
Of bloomy beauty that breaks in light
When the dawn walks down from the dreams of night.

Look at the moon in her glory hung,
And think of the spirit again grown young
Beneath the romance that used to glow
For the old sweethearts of the long ago.

Thousands too busy from day to day
To think of the sky, but a thing of gray,
When dozens of times in a year it gets
Its glory on when the old sun sets.

Look at the sun go down, sometime,
With a thousand beauties, and all sublime
In regal splendor, as if to say:
"God still lives in His world today."

These are the things that are well worth while—
The sunset glow and the silver smile
Of dawn, and the spirit of trust in you
That keeps you happy and holds you true.

Excellent Notion.

"There are now in existence so many societies for the prevention of so many different things, and so many more being formed all the time for the prevention of other things," said old P G. Pester, "that it would be a good idea to inaugurate a few societies for the prevention of societies for the prevention of things This could be carried on and elaborated until we had societies for the prevention of societies for the prevention of everything, somewhat on the order of torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers and torpedo-boat-destroyer destroyers. Then after the last society had done its duty we might abolish it and have a period of rest for the weary."—Kansas City Star.

First Seal of the United States.

The first great seal of the United States was cut for Uncle Sam in 1782 and the first document to bear its imprint is dated September, 1782. It is a parchment commission granting General Washington full power to arrange with the British for an exchange of prisoners of war. The document is signed by John Hancock, president of congress, and countersigned by Charles Thomas, secretary. The seal was impressed upon the parchment over a white wafer festooned with red in the upper left hand corner.—From the Magazine of American History.

now you have an idea what na- d begun to do for Jabez Carr.

I am getting ahead of my story. Carr did not recover his speech fter the brief, perfunctory trial ic Midthorne was over and the man stood honorably acquitted. efendant's story was not even ed by the commonwealth. There o voice to dispute his claim of defense, no witness to cast the est doubt upon the statement he The only human being who have spoken for or against him, powerless to utter an intelligible d.

hen John Payson entered the sick and calmly announced to his mother that the jury had discharged Eric without leaving the box, and on the advice of the court himself, Adam Carr opened his eyes and spoke aloud for the first time since he was stricken the week before.

"I knew they would," he said with an effort, but quite distinctly, to the great amazement of the doctor and the nurse. The Widow Payson and John were not surprised. They understood the inscrutable ways of the man.

The machinery of the law never worked so fast as in the case of the State vs. Eric Midthorne. Five days after he surrendered himself to the sheriff his case was called for hearing. The court room was crowded, for the Courier had announced the trial day and hour. No one was there in the hope of finding fresh sensations, but to hear the story of the fight from the lips of the victor himself.

Inside the railing sat the entire bar of the city. Judge Oswald Bright came over from the capital and occupied a seat on the bench beside the court. His daughter sat with Mary Midthorne at the defendant's table. Horace Blagden and his wife had seats so close to Eric that they could lean forward and whisper in his ear, an oft repeated act which sent a thrill of approbation through the big audience and had a moral though utterly wasted effect on the jury.

The preliminaries were brief. Mr. State's Attorney Collins read the affidavit on information and belief and called his only witness, the sheriff of the county, who merely testified that the prisoner at the bar was the man mentioned in the instrument and that he had openly confessed to the slaying of Chetwynd Blagden. The state rested. The audience leaned back with an audible breath of relief.

The defense very naturally moved to quash the indictment, on the ground that the corpus delicti had not been established, but formally withdrew the motion a moment later, as a part of the program, to permit Eric Midthorne to tell his story on the stand. The audience listened with breathless interest to the recital, dividing its attention between the young man in the box and the grey haired parents of Chetwynd Blagden watching with eager eyes for some sign of animosity on their part. If the people expected or hoped for a demonstration they were disappointed. The Blagdens sat very still and erect, their pinched backs to the multitude, their heads twisted slightly toward the witness, from whose face their gaze was not once removed during the uninterrupted recital. At its conclusion they turned expectantly toward the state's attorney.

Horace Blagden's figure straightened perceptibly. A moment later his own name was called. He arose slowly—at any other time we would have said pompously—and slipped into the witness box. A stir swept through the crowd. Here was a sensation after all.

Facing the judge, the great man of Corinth took the oath, his right hand uplifted. It did not tremble. He then testified to the reputation of the defendant for truth and veracity and to his standing in the community. That was all. He gave it clearly, unfalteringly. He was not asked if he were the father of the deceased. It was as the first citizen of Corinth that he testified. One could have been excused for smiling at the theatric display of self regard that overshadowed the real intention of the man. The great man of Corinth was speaking. No one could have asked for more than that.

Horace Blagden did not mean to place himself in a false position. He was intensely sincere in his desire to dissipate all doubts in the minds of the townspeople as to his attitude toward his nephew. No more convincing way could have presented itself, he argued, than this opportunity to publicly repeat the sentiment embodied in his earlier newspaper expression. Adam Carr, when he heard of the act, uttered an opinion that no one else dared to voice.

"Old Horace simply can't help it. It's born in him. When he dies, by the grace he'll lie in state. And no matter how dead he is, he'll know he's lying in state."

The judge instructed the jury to find for the defendant, and Eric was discharged from custody almost before you could have counted 12.

The whole affair was so palpably predestined that it savoured of travesty, and yet there was a seriousness about it all that could not be mistaken. The law itself did not come in for much consideration. So far as the real legal aspects of the case were concerned, all precedents were violated. But no one cared about that. Not a single soul in all Corinth desired the punishment of Eric Midthorne. Corinth, therefore, was the law.

Eric's trial was much the same as a wedding or a funeral—a matter of a few very important minutes and then everybody going about his own business as if it hadn't occurred. The wedding means a great deal to the fellow who is getting married, and the funeral is of the utmost importance to the chap who is being buried, but the world does not care a scrap what happens to either of them after it is all over. Most of us get married and all of us die. People come and see us do both, if the opportunity presents itself, and go away thoroughly satisfied that it is the end of the matter so far as they are concerned.

Corinth would have stepped up and congratulated Eric on his acquittal if it could have done so with propriety. But there had been ample time for reflection. The magnanimous Blagdens were to be considered. How would it appear to them if everyone rushed up to shake hands with the destroyer of their only son? Dreadful! So Corinth, or as much of it as could be crowded into the courtroom, considerately effaced itself as soon as the verdict was given.

While the crowd was leaving the courtroom, the judge on the bench calmly turned to the clerk and said.

"Call the next case, Mr. Clerk."

The regular panel remained in the jury box; the sheriff went over to the telephone and called up the gaol, and half an hour later a dissolute sailor from the water front was on trial for stealing a pound of tobacco, and the state's attorney was working his head off, so to speak, to secure the maximum penalty. One has to make an example of such chaps, you see. Society demands it.

* * * * * *

The Rev. Mr. Presbrey alone came forward to congratulate Eric, regardless of the presence of the Blagdens or the fitness of the occasion. With tears in his eyes, he wrung the embarrassed young man's hand with a vigor that suggested something long pent-up and thriving.

"Thank you, Mr. Presbrey," muttered Eric, very uncomfortable.

"We've been praying for you, Eric," said Mr. Presbrey; "Mrs. Presbrey and I. Ah, my dear young friend, you do not know how greatly this will please my wife, your most devoted friend. She is indisposed today. Otherwise she would have accompanied me here. But her heart is here, her thoughts are here."

"Good morning, Arthur," said Horace Blagden pleasantly. "I am sorry to hear that Julia is ill. Nothing serious, I hope."

Mr. Presbrey's eyes flew wide open. He stared for a moment. Then his face turned a deep pink.

"Not at all, not at all," he stammered, completely taken aback. "Merely a cold, Mr. Blagden. In the head."

"Please remember us to her," said Mr. Blagden, slipping his arm through Eric's. "Oh, by-the-by, Arthur," he went on after an instant's reflection, "will it be convenient for you to drop in to see me at the bank tomorrow? Any hour will do. I want to talk over a question in connection with the new library."

Mr. Presbrey stiffened. "I have read something about it," he said.

"Do you think Julia will be well enough to come to dinner tomorrow evening?" asked Mrs. Blagden. "Then you two could have the whole evening to yourselves in the library."

"Good!" said her husband genially. "And we could have the architect there to assist us. What do you say, Presbrey?"

Mr. Presbrey's face was a study.

"I—I—dear me, dear me!" he faltered, nervously fumbling for his handkerchief. Finding it, he blew his nose rather aimlessly and then repeated: "Dear me!" They were waiting for an answer. He cleared his throat. "Really, I—I—yes, yes, it's very good of you, I am sure. Dear me! Of course, you understand, it is only a cold in the head. I fancy she will be quite rid of it by tomorrow. Mustard foot bath tonight. Yes, yes! Hot mustard for a cold head—cold in the head, I should say. Dear me! It will seem quite like old times, my dear friends."

Horace was enjoying himself. Afterwards he confessed to a certain meanness of spirit, a delicious sensation of malice, but quite pardonable, he argued in view of the fact that he was returning good for evil. Eric, the only other witness beside Mrs. Blagden, actually felt sorry for the distressed exminister.

"Except that we all have grown older and wiser," supplemented Mr. Blagden.

Mr. Presbrey made haste to accept the amendment. "And better, I hope," he said. He did not know it, but that was a master-stroke. As a matter of fact, in repeating the amazing conversation to his wife, he quite forgot to mention the remark.

"We dine at 7, Mr. Presbrey," said Mrs. Blagden.

He responded bravely. "Instead of 6 30?"

Ah! Here was tribute to the memory of old times!

"I shall also ask Mr. King to come in," said Horace, in the most matter-of-fact way.

Mr. Presbrey drew a long breath. "I shall rejoice in the opportunity to meet him," he said desperately. "You said 6 30?"

"Seven," said Horace. Then, as if recognizing an oversight, he extended his hand. Mr. Presbrey was on the point of blowing his nose again. He hastily switched the handkerchief to his left hand, and clasped the ends of Mr. Blagden's fingers in his right. It was not much of a hand-shake, but it seemed to put new life into him. At least, he breathed with less difficulty.

He went home to Julia in a perfect maze of bewilderment. She not only took a mustard foot bath externally but nine grains of quinine the other way.

In the corridor of the courthouse, Eric, walking between his uncle and aunt with his arms through theirs, burst out feelingly:

"Uncle Horace, you are wonderful, really wonderful."

Mr. Blagden smiled, self-satisfied. "Paying off all the old scores, Eric," he said gravely.

A little group was waiting for them at the top of the stairway. John Payson quietly detached himself from the rest and started downstairs as they approached.

"Just a moment, John, if you please," said Mr. Blagden, raising his voice slightly. "This is a day for renewing old acquaintances, old friendships. Will you shake hands, sir?"

Payson did not hesitate. He clasped the banker's hand.

"Certainly, sir. Is this your verdict?"

Mr. Blagden was puzzled. He looked into the young man's steady eyes for a moment, then the doubt was lifted from his own.

"It is," he said succinctly, and Payson knew that at last he was acquitted of complicity in the bank defalcation. An instant later Horace remarked: "I am a just man. By-the-by," he went on, "how is Adam Carr today?"

"There is no change, Mr. Blagden. I am sorry to say. He will never speak again, sir."

Then Horace Blagden uttered a remarkable prophecy.

MAY LEAD AN ARMY AGAINST THE SERBS

Crown Prince Boris of Bulgaria.

According to cabled reports Crown Prince Boris of Bulgaria, who is barely past twenty-one years of age, will command a Bulgarian army if the threatened war against the allies becomes fact and an invasion of Serbia takes place. The prince was very active in the Balkan war against Turkey and even more so in the second Balkan war when Greece, Serbia and Roumania combined against Bulgaria. Crown Prince Boris is extremely popular with his people and his appointment as commander of an army division met with general approval.

SUNDAY WIDOWS

They had been married about three years and things had gone along smoothly enough. Then the Sunday widow moved next door and they had their first taste of matrimonial unpleasantness. The Sunday widow was a very charming young woman who wore a wedding ring, in addition to several others, and had two children about as near perfect as children can be. She also had a husband—a mysterious person who went to work very early and returned very late, and was said to be a man of extraordinary ability who drew a good salary, and was shortly to become a partner in the firm for which he worked. He was sometimes seen about in the evening, mowing his lawn and playing with his children on the porch. He was tall and strong and well tanned, a typical outdoor man. But from Friday evening until late Sunday evening he withdrew to unknown parts, and the plight of his wife was such that the young married woman next door called her a "Sunday widow" and felt sorry for her. It was not long before they were exchanging a word or two, then a front porch visit occasionally, and finally a back porch visit every now and then.

Thus the whole story came out. The mysterious husband of the Sunday widow was devoted to the fascinating game of golf. He went to work early in order to be free in the afternoon. He then went to play golf and got home some time in the evening. On Saturday afternoon he cast aside the cares of business and played golf as long as there was light until Sunday evening. His wife was in a quandary. She did not criticise her husband, but she did lead her neighbor to believe that she feared her children would grow up strangers to their father. Her perplexity was such as to invite sympathy, and she got it, not only from the young married woman next door, but also from other women in the neighborhood. And one or two who had successfully survived periods of Sunday widow regarded with unfeigned skepticism. She said her fascinating rival had won so completely that there was no hope until old age made him too weak to totter around his beloved golf course. The situation became acute, and then the young married woman next door had a brilliant idea.

She decided that since her own husband was a docile creature who never deserted her for the fascination of golf, though he had been devoted to it before their marriage, he would be just the person to help the Sunday widow recover her husband. He was, therefore, approached with great caution and finally apprised of the fact that he was to exercise his wonderful ability as a domestic diplomat on behalf of the Sunday widow next door. Naturally he balked, declaring that it was none of his business, but, after the fashion of docile husbands, he finally relented and agreed to do what he could. The news spread about the neighborhood, and he was watched with great interest. It so happened that the next Saturday afternoon the husband of the Sunday widow came home for something, and the diplomat took a long breath and approached him. Soon the two men were the center of attraction in the block. They talked over the fence a few minutes, then the husband of the widow stepped back and swung his arms and explained something, then the diplomat swung his arms and began to argue. In a few minutes the diplomat went into his house and returned with a dusty bag of golf clubs, and his wife thought him very clever, indeed, for was he not going to show the widow's husband that although he knew the game he preferred home to golf? The clubs were examined and tested and argued about, and then the diplomat returned to the house for his hat, and he and the man next door went away and now there is another Sunday widow in the block.

Must Fight It Out—Joffre.

From an Interview With General Joffre by Owen Johnson in Collier's Weekly.

Peace today would be a crime toward posterity. It would only be an armistice in which every nations would continue feverishly to prepare for war.

The French nation is too intelligent to deceive itself or to be deceived. We are not fighting a nation with the same ideas as our own, but a nation drunk with the idea of imperial domination, a nation which believes that in the progress of the world there is no place for little nations. The decision as to whether Europe will continue as free and individual will be made in this war alone. Either we win the right now to continue democratic and peaceful, or we surrender Europe to the imposition of an imperial idea.

You will find, wherever you go, that the French people know this. You will find them absolutely of one opinion. They are prepared for anything, and they know what the issue is. We do not need to lie to our soldiers. No matter how long the war lasts, it will be fought out until we have conquered the right to leave a heritage of peace to our children.

LABOR.

Carlyle.

For there is a perennial nobleness, and even sacredness, in work. Were he never so benighted, forgetful of his high calling, there is always hope in a man that actually and earnestly works; in idleness alone is there perpetual despair. Work, never so Mammonish, mean, is in communication with nature; the real desire to get work done will itself lead one more and more to truth, to nature's appointments and regulations, which are truth.

The latest gospel in this world is, "Know thy work, and do it." * * * It has been written, "an endless significance lies in work;" a man perfects himself by working. Foul jungles are cleared away, fair seed fields rise instead, and stately cities; and withal the man himself first ceases to be jungle and foul unwholesome desert thereby. Consider how, even in the meanest sorts of labor, the whole soul of a man is composed into a kind of real harmony the instant he sets himself to work. Doubt, desire, sorrow, remorse, indignation, despair itself, all these, like hell-dogs, lie beleaguering the soul of the poor day worker, as of every man; but he bends himself with free valor against his task, and all these are stilled, all these shrink murmuring far off into their caves. The man is now a man. The blessed glow of labor in him, is it not as purifying fire, wherein all poison is burnt up, and of sour smoke itself there is made bright, blessed flame.

Lloyd's Misty History.

Now that Mr. McKenna is looking to Lloyd's for a substantial contribution to the revenue from war profits, it is interesting to recall that the greatest maritime institution in the world is named, not after a financier or shipowner, but after an humble coffee-house keeper. Of Lloyd's history, says the London Chronicle, little is known beyond the fact that he kept a coffee house in Lombard street at the beginning of the eighteenth century, which, from its proximity to the Royal exchange, came to be the favorite assembling place of the underwriters.

The first mention of his house occurs in a poem. "The Wealthy Shopkeeper," published in 1700:

When to Lloyd's coffee house to go he never fails
To read the letters and attend the sales.

In 1710 Steel dated some numbers of the Tatler from Lloyd's and Addison also makes mention of the house in the Spectator.

Hardened.

"Mr. Editor, the mayor spoke very feelingly when welcoming us here and sympathized with us in the hardships we endured while prisoners in G. S. W. A., but I can assure you all those hardships can be considered as a pleasure when comparing them with the magnificent reception that was extended us."—Letter from a released prisoner of war in the Capetown (B. S. A.) Cape Times.

Appropriate Gift.

"How could old man Smith afford to give his daughter so many stocks for a wedding present?"

"I guess they came from his 'war brides' speculations."

What Ignorance.

"Shall we have champagne or some other wine?"

"Are there other wines?"—Punch.

To be a gentleman a man has to hide his meanness.

Out of Sorts

THAT IS, something is wrong with baby, but we can't tell just what it is. All mothers recognize the term by the lassitude, weakness, loss of appetite, inclination to sleep, heavy breathing, and lack of interest shown by baby. These are the symptoms of sickness. It may be fever, congestion, worms, croup, diphtheria, or scarlatina. Do not lose a minute. Give the child Castoria. It will start the digestive organs into operation, open the pores of the skin, carry off the fœtid matter, and drive away the threatened sickness.

Genuine Castoria always bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher

Poor Excuse.

Thomas Mott Osborne, warden of Sing Sing, said at a luncheon in Newport:

"This laying of all one's crimes and transgressions at the door of heredity disgusts me. If we sin, we ourselves are to blame. To blame heredity is false and foolish.

"These heredity blamers are like the chap who said to the dun:

"'We can't escape domination of early-formed habits. In my infancy my parents hired a young nursemaid to wheel me about in a baby-coach. And ever since that distant time, alas, I have been pushed for money.'"

Oh, Memory!

"What beautiful thought comes to mind, boys, on this bright, crisp morning?" asked the teacher.

"I know," said Jack, shooting up his hand.

"The beautifulest thought that comes to me today is of that day when it was so scorching hot that they had to close the school."

Prophetic.

"It's a good play, Bill," said the manager, who had just finished reading Shakespeare's new play of "Hamlet," "but it's too gloomy. Can't you put a little more comedy in it?"

"That," replied the author, "will be furnished by the actors who attempt to interpret the stellar role."

Stop That Backache!

There's nothing more discouraging than a constant backache. You are lame when you awake. Pains pierce you when you bend or lift. It's hard to rest and next day it's the same old story. Pain in the back is nature's warning of kidney ills. Neglect may pave the way to dropsy, gravel, or other serious kidney sickness. Don't delay—begin using Doan's Kidney Pills—the remedy that has been curing backache and kidney trouble for over fifty years.

A New Remedy for Kidney, Bladder and all Uric Acid Troubles

Dr. Eberle and Dr. Braithwaite as well as Dr. Simon—all distinguished Authors—agree that whatever may be the disease, the urine seldom fails in furnishing us with a clue to the principles upon which it is to be treated, and accurate knowledge concerning the nature of disease can thus be obtained. If backache, scalding urine or frequent urination bother or distress you, or if uric acid in the blood has caused rheumatism, gout or sciatica or you suspect kidney or bladder trouble just write Dr. Pierce at the Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y.; send a sample of urine and describe symptoms. You will receive free medical advice after Dr. Pierce's chemist has examined the urine—this will be carefully done without charge, and you will be under no obligation. Dr. Pierce during many years of experimentation has discovered a new remedy which is thirty-seven times more powerful than lithia in removing uric acid from the system. If you are suffering from backache or the pains of rheumatism, go to your best druggist and ask for a 50 cent box of "Anuric" put up by Doctor Pierce, or send 10c for a large trial pck'g. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, for weak women and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for the blood have been favorably known for the past forty years and more. They are standard remedies to-day—as well as Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets for the liver and bowels. You can have a sample of any one of these remedies by writing Dr. Pierce, and sending 10c for trial package.

DARKEN GRAY HAIR, LOOK YOUNG, PRETTY

Grandma's recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur darkens so naturally that nobody can tell.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Now you just ask by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe for about 50 cents.

It darkens gray hair so it! No one can tell. It darkened your hair so it does it so naturally and evenly or soft brush through your hair a time; by ..pears, and ...two, your hair ...ful, thick and ...

DRINK HOT TEA FOR A BAD COLD

Get a small package of Hamburg Breast Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teacup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus driving a cold from the system.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

RUB BACKACHE AND LUMBAGO RIGHT OUT

Rub Pain and Stiffness away with a small bottle of old honest St. Jacobs Oil

It makes a country editor feel bully to have John Smith or Tom Jones meet him on the street and hand him a dollar, with the remark: "I don't know when my subscription expires, but just give me credit for this dollar, anyway." But don't be at all timid in case your name doesn't happen to be John Smith or Tom Jones—we'll grab that dollar, just the same.

The Belmond Commercial Club is trying to induce the American Sugar Co. to erect a sugar factory in Belmond. At a meeting last week C. T. Fenton, who is a director of the American Sugar Co., was present, and gave out the impression that the company would likely build there during the next two years, providing the tariff on sugar is increased or the present duty of one cent is continued. Belmond should make a good location, as she has the railroad facilities and other advantages.

GRAY HAIR BECOMES DARK, THICK, GLOSSY

Look years younger! Try Grandma's recipe of Sage and Sulphur and nobody will know.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle for about 50 cents. Everybody uses this old, famous recipe, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

J. P. GROVE DIES MONDAY

John P. Grove was born in Defiance county, Ohio, May 10, 1847, and died near Klemme, Iowa on the 15th of Nov., 1915.

When eight years of age his parents removed to Covington, Ind., where he grew to manhood. On July 4th, 1888 he was joined in marriage to Sarah F. Post. To this union were born nine children.

Mr. Grove and family moved to Iowa sixteen years ago. Two of these years were spent in Hamilton county and fourteen in Hancock county.

He was taken seriously sick last May and partially during these months until last Monday when at 2:45 a. m. he gently fell asleep to awaken in the ressurrection.

Those left to mourn his loss are; his wife and five children; John P., Benjamin H., Florence, Gipson, and Walla, besides two step children, Brunnie Post and Norma Buckley.

Four preceeded their father in death. Mr Groves was an upright citizen and had the confidence of those near him who also felt assured he was prepared to go.

The funeral was held at the home at 10 a m on Wednesday, followed by interment by the side of one of his children in the Garner cemetery.

WINTER EGG PRODUCTION HINTS

A larger proportion of corn and other concentrates can, of course, be more safely fed for two or three weeks before marketing time than at any other period.

Winter eggs are the eggs that count Hens will quickly respond to proper treatment with more eggs if given a chance Here's how:

Fix permanent winter laying and sleeping quarters. The house need not be warm, but must be free from draughts Build it tight on three sides, with open windows on the south that can be covered with muslin in severe weather.

Keep the house filled with 12 to 18 inches of clean straw and feed all grain in this litter More eggs will result from making the hen work for her living

Provide plenty of nests and lots of clean straw.

Corn, wheat and oats are better fed mixed than separatly and should be fed in litter.

When green feed is lacking, supply it in the form of sprouted oats or cooked alfalfa

Keep a pan of grit, oyster shell and charcoal in the hen house.

Plenty of fresh water in a clean [vessel] should be always at hand

Mix bran, middlings corn meal, ground oats, meat scraps or high grade tankage in a mash and place in an open hopper The hen will not eat too much.

Hopes Women Will Adopt This Habit As Well As Men

Glass of hot water each morning helps us look and feel clean, sweet, fresh.

Happy, bright, alert—vigorous and vivacious—a good clear skin: a natural, rosy complexion and freedom from illness are assured only by clean, healthy blood If only every woman and likewise every man could realize the wonders of the morning inside bath, what a gratifying change would take place.

Instead of the thousands of sickly, anaemic-looking men, women and girls with pasty or muddy complexions; instead of the multitudes of "nerve wrecks," "rundowns," "brain fags" and pessimists we should see a virile, optimistic throng of rosy-cheeked people everywhere.

An inside bath is had by drinking, each morning before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour fermentations and poisons, thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Those subject to sick headache, biliousness; nasty breath, rheumatism, colds; and particulary those who have a pallid, sallow complexion and who are constipated very often, are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store which will cost but a trifle but is sufficient to demonstrate the quick and remarkable change in both health and appearance awaiting those who practice internal sanitation. We must remember that inside cleanliness is more important than outside, because the skin does not absorb impurities to contaminate the blood, while the pores in the thirty feet of bowels do

BRYAN—KING OF PEACE

No one who knows Bryan anticipated that he would approve President Wilson's national defense program. In the first place Bryan is not in the habit of agreeing with any one in the democratic party, and in the second place he is obsessed with the idea that the only form of defense is no defense at all. Bryan is a peace fanatic. He is in the same boat with the fellow who would tear down a fire escape on the theory that fire escapes provoke fire, or that the presence of medicine in the house might cause disease. He appears to be blind to the fact that this is not a civilized age but one of aggression in which "might is right." The fate of China should be sufficient argument against any oratorical salve from Bryan in his attempts to gloss over a hard truth merely to embarrass the president, who is as much committed to peace as he is. Intelligent Americans know that Japan has little if any love for this country, and that nothing would suit the Japs any better than to have Americans adopt a policy of idiotic defenselessness. Bryan's theories are lovely, but we are afraid they are unsuited to the age in which we live. As a matter of fact, Bryan is not so much committed to peace as he is a disturber of it.—Thompson Courier.

GLASS OF SALTS IF YOUR KIDNEYS HURT

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have Bladder trouble—Salts fine for Kidneys.

Meat forms uric acid which excites and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Regular eaters of meat must flush the kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; removing all the acids, waste and poison, else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or side headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get irritated, obliging you to get up two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive; harmless and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then, thus avoiding serious kidney and bladder diseases.

Few have heard of the university of Amersfoort, and its attendance is only about 100 students, but on its faculty are many very famous Belgian and Dutch professors. It was formed less than a year ago among Belgian refugees interned for the duration of the war at the Dutch town by that name. The students undergo no entrance examinations, choose their own courses of study, and end them whenever they may have had enough.

German machine guns which have been recently captured show a great improvement on those that were used at the beginning of the war. They can be carried by one man, ammunition, spare parts and all, and they are provided with an extra tube. It is not that the German gun is light, but it is so contrived that it can be hoisted on to a man's back, certain parts being padded and providing an easy grip

Vivid, though grewsome, is the description of Rheims cathedral by Marcel Provost of the French academy when he says. "It has been scalped of its roofing; its eyes have been put out; its columns have been broken, shattered along their length like splintered bones. The red which tints the stones and which was produced by fire, looks like bloodstains. The cathedral of Rheims is dead."

CAPTAIN J. F. MERRY ANNOUNCES MEMBERS OF OFFICIAL STAFF

Also Calls Special Attention to Annual Meeting of Posts In December.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 13.—J. F. Merry, department commander of the G. A. R. of Iowa, yesterday announced the appointment of the following to his staff: William H. Easterly, of Clinton; A. T. Weatherway, of Charles City; C. G. Crabtree, of Waterloo; J. H. Stevens, of Mason City; H. G. Porter, of Central City; F. M. Thompson, of Rock Rapids; T. E. McCurdy, of Hazleton: John B. Anderson, of Winterst; W. S. Wallace, of Independence; J. B. McCurdy, of Oskaloosa; Albert Cooper, of Oskaloosa; Charles H. Babbitt, of Washington, D. C.

The commander calls attention to the annual meetings of the posts to be held in December. He asks the support and advice of the best men of the G. A. R. He says:

"Some sacrifice is necessary at this time from those having served in the early history of the order when it was on the upgrade, and are thereby better qualified to direct its destinies when the evening shadows are closing around us. Let us lend a hand to perpetuate the order so long as comrades remain."

COMMISSION SPENDS ONLY $60,000 OF APPROPRIATION

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 13.—With but a few days remaining before the closing of the Panama-Pacific exposition at San Francisco, the Iowa Panama-Pacific commission, which was given an appropriation of $75,000 for the proper exhibition of Iowa resources at the fair, is far from being broke.

The commission drew $15,000 from the state treasury a few days ago and still has $15,000 to its credit.

The exposition will close December 4. The property of the Iowa historical department which has been on display at San Francisco will be boxed and returned to Des Moines early in December. Although there has been some talk of preserving the Horn of Plenty, which won the first prize in the agricultural department for Iowa at the exposition, it is probable that no attempt will be made to bring it back to Iowa, it is said.

IOWAN GETS JUDGMENT IN "WIRE TAPPING" CASE

Minneapolis, Minn., Nov 13.—Judgment in the sum of $5,000 was given James L. Green, of Algona, Ia., against Edward Dixon alias Edward H. Bryant, Dan Lebar, Red Carlson, G W Peterson and John Doe.

The judgment grew out of the famous wire tapping case, of which Lebar was convicted in district court. Green was told on May 9, 1914, that a big horse race was coming off in New Orleans, and there was a chance to make a big "killing." He gave the defendants a $5,000 draft, according to his statements, and never heard anything more about the race or the men concerned.

Dixon jumped his bail after his arrest and has never been apprehended.

Lebar was sentenced to the penitentiary but appealed to the supreme court The case will be argued November 16. The others against whom judgment was rendered were never prosecuted.

HAMILTON WILL NOT BREAK POLITICAL GAME

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Nov 13.—The name of John T Hamilton, of this city, is being frequently mentioned in connection with the Iowa gubernatorial campaign next year, but Mr Hamilton has made the positive statement that he is through with politics and would not under any circumstances be a candidate next year for governor. He made the race last year on the democratic ticket against Governor Clarke and did not receive the support in democratic strongholds where he figured he would be strong. Mr Hamilton at present is in the south on a business trip.

IOWA MAN CONFESSES VOORHEES MURDER TO SAVE ACCUSED WOMAN

Police Take Admission Seriously, as His Statements Conform to Crime.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Nov. 13.—John Burke, age 22, gave himself up to police here late yesterday and has confessed to the murder of Franklin Voorhees, a broker in Chicago, on October 23. It is believed by the police that he killed Voorhees, as Burke's story coincides exactly with the story of the Voorhees murder.

Burke said he gave himself up because an innocent woman has been charged with the crime.

Voorhees was murdered at his home in Chicago on October 23. The woman held for the crime was suspected to have been prompted by jealousy. The names of two women were drawn into the case and the one who had been jilted was placed under arrest.

DES MOINES TO PROTEST TAX BONUS INVESTIGATION

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 13.—For the purpose of determining the status of the "bonus system" or tax remission problem that is being agitated in Des Moines at the present time, the members of the directory board of the chamber of commerce yesterday afternoon named the entire board as a committee to confer with County Attorney George Wilson and the board of supervisors on November 15.

Just what will take place at the conference is a matter of speculation, but it is almost certain the chamber of commerce men will register a vigorous protest against the proposition to make firms who have been attracted to Des Moines by a bonus and who are located here and doing business, pay up back taxes.

OHIO SUFFS DECIDE TO ASSIST CAUSE IN IOWA

Cleveland, Ohio, Nov. 13.—The Ohio State Suffrage association executive committee will demand that the money, energy and brains of the suffrage leaders be concentrated in an effort to carry Iowa for suffrage next June. So that nothing might stand in the way of the Ohio suffragists lending their support to the Iowa fight, the committee last night declined to decide the problem as to when the next vote should be made in Ohio.

"We believed it to be more important to center our activities in Iowa," said Mrs. Harriet Taylor Upton, president of the state association. "After Iowa, we shall ask the national association that a selection be made of South Dakota or West Virginia, for centralizing the force of suffrage activity We believe that the scattering of efforts has not assisted the cause"

GOVERNMENT ESTIMATE ON IOWA CROPS FOR 1915

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 13.—The federal bureau estimates for Iowa crops this year are as follows

Corn—Estimated this year, 310,000,000 bushels final estimate last year 389,424,000, price November 1 to producers, 59 cents per bushel, year ago 61 cents.

Wheat—Estimated this year, 16,731,000 bushels, final estimate last year 15,066,000 bushels, price November 1 to producers, 89 cents per bushel year ago, 96 cents

Oats—Estimate this year 200,475,000 bushels, final estimate last year, 166,000,000 bushels, price November 1 to producers, 89 cents per bushel, year ago, 96 cents.

Barley—Estimated this year, 11,120,000 bushels final estimate last year 9,360,000 bushels price November 1 to producers, 49 cents per bushel year ago, 53 cents.

Potatoes—Estimate this year 16,300,000 bushels final estimate last year 12,642,000 bushels, price November 1 to producers, 48 cents per bushel, year ago, 57 cents.

Apples—Estimate this year 3,220,000 barrels; final estimate last year, 533,000 barrels price October 15 to producers, $2 25 per barrel, year ago $3 20.

CLAY COUNTY TO BUILD MANY GRAVELLED ROADS

Spencer, Ia., Nov. 13.—Clay county will be the first county in Iowa to gravel all of its county road system and it is going to be done on the bond issue plan. The board of supervisors has voted to gravel any or all of the county roads wherever interested property owners will donate $300 per mile Already work is in progress on 16 miles leading into Spencer, the county seat, toward which the farmers donated $250 per mile and the town $50 per mile The village of Greenville has raised enough money to bring the gravel into its place.

This movement is the result of the co-operation of the board and the people A big meeting was held at which 250 farmers were present, many with petitions in their pockets ready to be circulated. A vote resulted almost unanimously in a recommendation for the supervisors to go ahead and complete the graveling of the county road system. Road funds will be overdrawn and the local banks have agreed to carry the warrants until the work is finished, then bonds will be issued to finance the deficit thus deliberately created in the road fund

SENATOR THOMPSON IS AFTER KENNEDY'S JOB

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 13.- "Dopsters" today assert that Senator Frank Thompson, of Burlington, author of the Iowa loan agent law, will be a candidate for congress in the First district against Congressman Kennedy

COSSON IS INVESTIGATING RECENT LIQUOR DECISION

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 11 Conferences in the office of Attorney General Cosson are being held this week to determine whether an appeal to the United States court of appeals shall be taken from the decision rendered last month by Judge Carpenter in the federal court at Chicago, declaring invalid the Iowa law requiring consignees to personally receive liquor shipments Mr. Cosson said he expected a decision as to his department's purpose would be reached by the end of the week

Judge Carpenter granted an injunction against the Rock Island railroad on behalf of the Hamm Brewing company, of St. Paul, compelling that line to accept liquor shipments for delivery in Iowa. Before final action was taken C. A. Robbins, assistant attorney general, went to Chicago and objected to the injunction on the ground that it compelled the railroad officials to violate the law of the state of Iowa, which directs that liquor shipments must be received by the consignees Judge Carpenter held that the Iowa law was void because it clashed with a federal law

TAX "BONUS SYSTEM" IN DES MOINES MAY NOT STAND LAW TEST

County Attorney Investigating and City Officials Are Very Indignant.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 12.—County Attorney George Wilson yesterday began to investigate the legality of the "bonus system" of tax remission employed for years by city councils as a means to attract factories.

If the attorney finds that the taxes should be collected for the last five years, the county treasurer will be ordered, it is said, to levy assessments on approximately $1,056,555 for each year.

City Assessor Ben J. Ness yesterday furnished newspapers with a list of the corporations in the "bonus" list.

The concerns employ hundreds of Des Moines men the year round. They were induced to come to Des Moines partly by promises that they would not be taxed for a certain time after locating here.

"The proposition to collect these taxes is an outrage," declared City Assessor Ness yesterday. "I can't be too strong in expressing my contempt for such a move."

The assessor said that the law, he believes, will require the collection of both school and state taxes if the matter is pressed These two items will total 40 mills, or nearly half of the entire 1916 levy of 85 mills, according to Mr Ness. It will mean that the firms will be forced to pay hundreds of thousands of dollars.

GIRL PLAYS DETECTIVE TO CAPTURE ASSAILANT

Waterloo, Ia., Nov. 12—Miss Rose Bloom, a pretty telephone operator, after being attacked on the night of October 24, on a lonely bridge while going home, has been playing the role of detective. Saturday a young man met her and spoke to her. She made an engagement to meet him Sunday afternoon and notified the police. When the young man approached Miss Bloom Detective McSweeney arrested him. He gave the name of Peter Willis. He denies that he attacked the young woman and Police Judge Meyers gave him two days in jail on a disorderly charge. In the meantime the police will make further investigation of his story

COUNTY FAIRS TO RECEIVE $48,531 AS STATE AID

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 12.—Ninety-three county and district fair associations have filed claims with the Iowa department of agriculture for a total of $48,531 40 state aid for the year 1915.

This is more than double the amount paid out in 1914. Last year 91 fair associations drew $20,205 17 state aid.

The Thirty-sixth general assembly increased the appropriation for the assistance of the small fairs. Where the maximum state aid was $300 per year for any one fair, the legislature changed the schedule so that the maximum now is $800 a year. This is on the basis of 60 per cent of the first $1 000 offered in premiums and 20 per cent of the next $1,000

VACATIONS ABRIDGED IN SCHOOLS AT MASON CITY

Mason City, Ia Nov 12 --The board of education of this city last night in regular session, passed upon two important measures. J., Nov. 13.—At its closing session here today the executive commission of the Presbyterian general assembly, the ad interim ruling body of the church outlined an emergency message on "Preparedness," for extraordinary conditions expected to follow the close of hte European war, which is to be sent to 10,000 pastors, President Woodrow Wilson and 49,000 other elders of the denomination.

President Wilson's defense program was declared to have the moral support of members of the executive commission.

CABINET CHANGES AGAIN HINTED AT Houston Said to Be Slated For Another Post, Possibly Ambassadorship—Rumors Are Revived.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 13.—New rumors of impending cabinet changes are current in Washington today.

Secretary of Agriculture Houston is said to be slated for an important post other than his present one, whether it means he is to get an ambassadorship or there is to be a shift in the cabinet is subject for speculation.

The talk that Secretary of Commerce Redfield is to go has not been quieted. Should he go, Mr. Houston might be given his position. Assistant Secretary Vrooman is being discussed for secretary of agriculture in case Houston gets another post.

Vrooman is a close friend of Captain Smith, W. S. A., of Sioux City, special adviser to the department on important practical agricultural subjects.

REITERATES GERMANY CANNOT BE STARVED

Chancellor Assures Socialists Hopes of Enemies Will Not Be Realized.

Berlin, (by wireless to Sayville), Nov. 12.—Answering the petition of the socialist party, concerning the question of food prices, Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the German imperial chancellor, declared that the population of the country could be completely assured that the hopes of the entente powers of starving out Germany would be disappointed.

The Overseas News agency adds:

'Appreciating the fact that the socialist party was convinced that Germany possessed sufficient supplies of food the imperial chancellor declared that the authorities had further decided to remove all speculation in bread

"Dr von Bethmann-Hollweg explained that the entente powers deceived their nations by misrepresenting the German discussion regarding the question of food prices as signs of weakening in the energy of the German nation, which he said, was sure of victory."

HAITI CONSENTS TO YANKEE PROTECTORATE

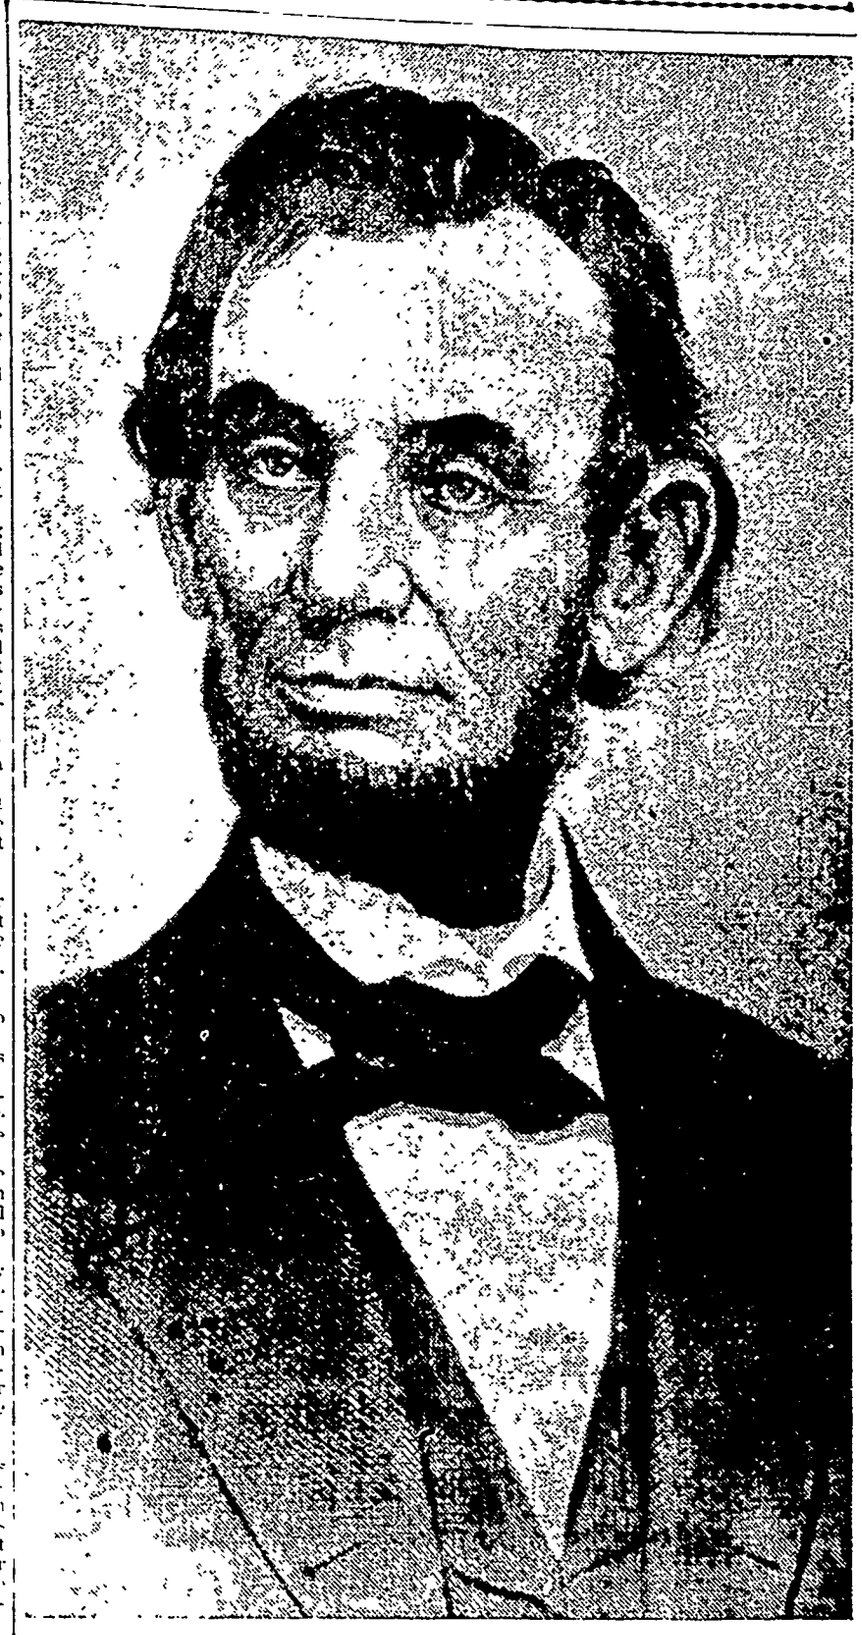
"BENEFITS FORGOT."

A Thanksgiving Story of Abraham Lincoln.

BY HONORE WILLSIE IN THE DELINEATOR.



"To my mind the noblest holiday in the world is Thanksgiving. And next the Creator there is no one the holiday should be dedicated to as much as to mothers."

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

imes a week during the year wed Jason's mother saddled m and rode down to the post- [illegible] had written that the only letter [illegible] the spring they heard from Jason Each time he was doing well and want money The last time Jason's mother sold her mahogany hat box to the storekeepers wife The second time the cameo pin went to the doctor's wife The third time she could sell nothing, she wrote Jason and she wrote in deep contrition for she knew that Jason was half starving himself and worked hard The fourth letter was urgent

"I'm going into the army mother. There's a wonderful chance for surgeons now I must have $100 though to buy into partnership with Dr Edwards before I go That assures me of a good berth as soon as the war is over I think you had better sell Pilgrim You really don't need him, and you can get $100 for him easily if you sell him to the government Mr Inchpin would tend to it for you"

Jason's mother read the letter heavily It was November again The river packets would not make many more trips Drearily the Kentucky hills rolled back from the river and drearily the Ohio valleys stretched inland Old Pilgrim plodded patiently toward his stable and his mistress huddled in the saddle unheeding until Pilgrim stamped impatiently at the stable door Then she dismounted and the great horse stamped into his stall

"I know that I don't need you Pilgrim," she said "It's just that you are like a living bit of father—and if Jason would only seem to understand that, it wouldn't be so hard to let you go. I wonder if all young folks are like Jason"

Old Pilgrim leaned his head over his stall and in the November gloaming he looked long at his mistress with his wise and gentle eyes It was as if he would tell her that he had learned that youth is always a little hard, that only long years in harness with always the back breaking load to pull not for oneself, but for others, can make the really grateful heart. One of the sweet deep compensations of the years, the old horse seemed to say, is that gratitude grows in the soul

So Jason and Old Pilgrim both went to war They did not see each other, but each one, in his own way, made a brilliant record. Pilgrim learned the sights and sounds and smells of war. The fearful pools of blood ceased to send him plunging and rearing in harness. The screams of utter fear or of distress. The screams of utter fear or of mortal agony no longer set him to neighing or sweating in sympathy. Pilgrim, superb in strength and superb in intelligence, plodded efficiently through a battle just as he had plodded efficiently over the circuit of Jason's Methodist father.

And Jason, cool and clear-headed, with his wonderful long strong hands, sawed and sewed and probed and purged his way through field hospital after field hospital, until the men began to hear of his skill and to ask for him when the fear of death was on them. His work absorbed him more and more, until months went by, and he neglected to write to his mother! Just why, who can say? Each of us, looking into his heart, perhaps can find some answer. But Jason was young, and work and world hungry. He did not ask himself embarrassing questions. The months slipped into a year, and the first year into a second year. Still Jason did not write to his mother! How'd you get your training as a surgeon? Who paid for it? Your father?"

Jason reddened "Well, no, father was a poor Methodist preacher. Mother raised the money, though I worked for my board mostly."

"Yes, how'd she raise the money?"

Jason's lips were stiff. "Selling things, Mr. President."

"What did she sell?"

"Father's watch—the old silver teapot—the mahogany hat box—the St. Bartholomew candlestick Old things mostly, beyond use except in museums."

Again silence in the room, while a look of contempt gathered in Abraham Lincoln's eyes that seared Jason's cool young soul till it scorched within him. "You poor fool!" said Lincoln "You poor worm' Her household treasures—one by one—for you 'Useless things—fit for museums" Oh, you fool' "

Jason flushed angrily and bit his lips Suddenly the president rose and pointed a long bony finger at his desk. "Come here and sit down and write a letter to your mother'"

Jason stalked obediently over and sat down in the president's seat. Anger and mortification were ill inspirations for letter writing, but under Lincoln's burning eyes Jason seized a pen and wrote his mother a stilted note. Lincoln paced the floor, pausing now and again to look over Jason's shoulder.

"Address it and give it to me," said the president. "I'll see that it gets to her." Then his stern voice rising a little. "And now, Jason Wilkins, as long as you are in the army, you write to your mother once a week. If I have reason to correct you on the matter again, I'll have you courtmartialed"

Jason rose and handed the letter to the president, then stood, angry and silent, awaiting further orders. Abraham Lincoln took another turn or two up and down the room Then he paused before the window and looked from it a long, long time. Finally he turned to Jason.

"My boy," he said gently "there is no finer quality in the world than gratitude There is nothing a man can have in his heart so mean, so low as ingratitude. Even a dog appreciates a kindness, never forgets a soft word, or a bone. To my mind, the noblest holiday in the world is Thanksgiving And, next the Creator, there is no one the holiday should be dedicated to as much as to mothers."

Again Lincoln paused, and looked from the boyish face of the young surgeon out of the window at the bleak November skies, and Lincoln said to Jason, with God knows what tragedy of memory in his lonely heart.

"Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky;
Thou dost not bite so nigh
As benefits forgot."

Another pause. "You may go, my boy." And Lincoln shook hands with Jason, who stumbled from the room, his mind a chaos of resentment and anger He made his way down Pennsylvania avenue, pausing as two army officers rode up to a hotel and dismounted, leaving their horses. Something about the big gray that one of the oficers rode seemed vaguely familiar to the young doctor. The gray turned his small, inteligent head toward Jason, then with a sudden soft whinny, laid his head on Jason's shoulder and nuzzled his cheek gently. Jason looked at the right fore shoulder. A three-cornered scar was there. Jason and Old Pilgrim never had met but once, and yet—Jason was little more than a boy Suddenly he threw his arms around Old Pilgrim's neck, and sobbed into the silky mane. Passers-by glanced curiously and then went on—Washington was full of tears those days.

Pilgrim whinnied and waited patiently. Finally Jason wiped his eyes. "I'll buy you back from Captain Winston, Pilgrim. I'll get a furlough, if I have to ask the president himself. We'll get home to mother for Thanksgiving, Pilgrim. We will, if God will let my unworthy hulk live that long."

And Pilgrim, with a scar on his right fore shoulder, and Jason with the scar on his soul that only remorse imprints there, started that evening for Green Valley

Thanksgiving.

Children, do you know the story
Of the first Thanksgiving day,
Founded by our Pilgrim Fathers
In that time so far away?

They had given for religion,
Wealth and comfort; yes, and more—
Left their homes, friends and kindred
For a bleak and barren shore.

On New England's rugged headlands,
Now where peaceful Plymouth lies,
There they built their rough log cabins
'Neath the cold November skies.

And too often e'en the bravest
Felt his blood run cold with dread
Lest the wild and savage red man
Burn the roof above his head.

Want and sickness, death and sorrow
Met their eyes on ever hand;
And before the springtime reached them
They had buried half their band.

But their noble, brave endurance
Was not exercised in vain;
Summer brought them brighter prospects,
Ripening seeds and waving grain.

And the patient Pilgrim mothers,
As the harvest time drew near,
Looked with happy, thankful faces
At the full corn in the ear.

So the governor, William Bradford,
In the gladness of his heart,
To praise God for all his mercies,
Set a special day apart.

This was in the autumn, children,
Sixteen hundred twenty-one,
Scarce a year from when they landed
And the colony begun.

And now, when, in late November
Our Thanksgiving feast is spread,
'Tis the same time-honored custom
Of the Pilgrims long since dead.

LAUGHTER.

John Bunny in the Photo Play.

Laughter is the solution of life; laughter is life; laughter daily makes it possible to go on. There is only one delight that is keener than that of a joke, a comment, or a gesture at which you spontaneously laugh, and that is the delight of making other people, a whole crowd of people laugh with you. Making other people laugh is the greatest game in the world—and we are all playing it. Some of us are professionals; most of us are amateurs; that is all. We all like tears, I suppose, or we would not shed them so easily. But what is the good of tears, unless it is to increase our delight in laughter?

If the tragic spirit is always hovering over us, always the comic spirit is just around the corner. For the comic spirit, which is the spirit of laughter, is a rough and ready and every day sort. It is above us or beneath us—it is of us. Laughter is a wind; sadness is a cloud. The wind of laughter—and nothing else—may dispel the cloud of sadness. What better job in life could a man hope for than to be a wind of laughter? None, unless to be a gale, a gale of laughter blowing around the world!

HUGE POWDER ORDER LANDED BY DU PONT

Allies Said to Have Contracted For $65,000,000 Worth of Explosives.

Wilmington, Del., Nov 12.—The Du Pont Powder company, according to trustworthy information, has received an additional $65,000,000 powder order from the entente allies. The company officials today would not confirm nor deny the report

ONLY FEAR HOLDS GREECE IN CHECK

Rome Questions Friendship For Allies — Fleet Dominates Them—Rumor of Plot to Share Spoils.

Berlin Nov 13, (by wireless to Tuckerton, N J)—"According to a dispatch to the Cologne Gazette from Sofia," says the Overseas News agency." M. Skouloudis, the new Greek premier, has assured M. Passarow, Bulgarian minister at Athens, of the premier's sincere desire to maintain friendly relations between Greece and Bulgaria. Greece, the premier assured the minister" the dispatch adds, "was not planning to attack Bulgaria."

London, Nov 13.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram company from Athens says a decree has been issued dissolving the chamber of deputies, and that the new elections have been fixed for December 19.

Rome, Nov 13.—The benevolent sentiments toward the entente allies expressed by Greece have been received with skepticism in Italian political circles. The Messagero says that uncensored news of events in Greece proves that it is fear of naval action by the allies that has held back King Constantine and his government up to the present time.

The Idea Nazionale publishes a telegram from Sofia stating that the relations between Bulgaria and Greece are becoming more intimate daily. It is believed certain that Greece and Bulgaria will conclude an agreement for the dismenberment of Serbia and Albania.

Bulgaria has renounced her claims to Kavalla in exchange for the support of Greece in obtaining Durazzo. The king has made a speech announcing that Bulgaria is about to become a great power and have command in three seas.

TURKEY AND BULGARIA FILE THEIR PROTEST TO GREECE

Berlin, (by wireless to Tuckerton), Nov. 12.—According to reports from Athens received in Budapest, the Turkish and Bulgarian ministers at Athens have entered a protest couched in friendly terms against the presence of Anglo-French troops in Greek Macedonia, as not being in accordance with Greek neutrality, says the Overseas News agency.

"M. Skouloudis, the Greek premier, replied, according to the Budapest advices, that he took notice of the protest and that the government would do what was possible in order to clarify the situation."

BRITISH THINK WILSON TRADE NOTE IS UNFAIR

London, Nov. 12.—"The American note causes us little concern, as Englishmen," says the Spectator, commenting on the recent note of the United States to Great Britain relative to interference with American trade. "Its harsh and unsympathetic tone will not make us relax in the slightest degree the grip on the throat of Germany, which our sea power gives us."

The Spectator believes the majority of Americans would not tolerate seeing Great Britain stabbed in the back. The weekly continues:

"When history comes to be written Americans of the future will feel anything but pride when they remember the official action of America during the great war."

The Spectator, says the British have not torpedoed American shops nor have they killed American citizens. The British embassy has not been the center of plots and conspiracies yet, when the whole tone of the notes toward Great Britain and Germany is considered it is much less friendly toward Great Britain.

Referring to the sinking of the Italian steamship Ancona, the Spectator says that unless the championship which the executive has assumed refers to goods only and does not cover human beings, it ventures to suggest that Washington at least repeat the Lusitania warning.

LYBIAN REBELS DRIVE BACK ITALIAN FORCES

Berlin, (by wireless to Sayville), Nov. 12—"Constantinople reports received here give details of Italian disasters in Lybia, northern Africa" says the Overseas News agency. Arabs have conquered Dshefra, Hum Ra-Dan, Zallein, Urfele, Misrata, Turga and Tarhuna. The Italian losses were heavy. In addition, the Arabs captured 20 cannon and three machine guns and plenty of ammunition. The Italian troops, which attempted to assist Tarhuna, must retreat to Tripoli, after having suffered heavy losses."

TAILORS WIN STRIKE.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 12.—Two hundred striking tailors, who yesterday demanded shorter hours and increased wages, returned to work today, having won their principal contentions, but enough other shops were called out by strike leaders to maintain the number of strikers at approximately 500.

DISCUSS SEA PROBLEMS.

New York, Nov. 12.—How to develop the American mercantile marine and American foreign trade safety of transportation on the sea and the safety of seamen, will be discussed from many points of view in the annual meeting of the academy of political science, which began here today. The sessions will continue for two days. The general topic today is "The Development of American Shipping."

NEUTRAL NATIONS WILL HOLD PEACE CONFERENCE SOON

Quasi Official Meeting Will Take Place In Europe Before Christmas, Wilson Is Informed.

JORDAN ASKS ASSISTANCE

Wants President to Cooperate In Calling Congress to Establish Court to Arbitrate Present World War.

Washington, Nov. 13.—David Starr Jordan, chancellor of Leland Standford university and head of the International Peace congress recently held in San Francisco, told President Wilson today that a quasi official meeting of neutral nations probably will be held some time before Christmas, either at The Hague, Berne, or Copenhagen, to attempt to bring about peace in Europe.

Dr. Jordan conveyed to the president a resolution from the peace congress urging him to co-operate with other neutrals in calling such a conference. In a statement laid before the president by Dr. Jordan it was declared that a result of recent missions to the governments of the warring nations, it could be stated that while the nations at war were not willing themselves to begin negotiations for peace—there is nevertheless abundant evidence that those charged with the administration of the foreign policies of these nations would welcome or at least not oppose affirmative action by a neutral agency to bring about a peace based on international justice.

Favored by Neutrals.

Dr. Jordan said that while no official information was available, peace advocates had learned from unofficial sources in Holland, Sweden, Switzerland, Denmark and Spain that these countries would be glad to take part in any movement to further the cause of peace. Dr. Jordan was accompanied by Louis P. Lochner, secretary of the Chicago Peace society, and who acted as secretary to Miss Jane Addams of Hull House, Chicago when she visited Europe as a representative of the Women's Peace congress and much of the information communicated to the president today was gathered by Miss Addams and her companions.

Dr. Jordan took the position that it would be more natural for the European neutrals to invite the United States to participate in the peace conference than for the United States to issue the invitation. He said that an unofficial meeting of peace advocates at Berne, December 14, at which plans for bringing about peace will be discussed will be attended by people from the United States. The idea of the quasi official peace conference suggested to President Wilson on behalf in the international peace congress by Dr. Jordan was that it would constitute a voluntary court of continuous mediation, would invite suggestions for settlement for each of the warring nations and in any case, would submit simultaneously to all of them reasonable proposals as a basis for peace.

Wilson's View Unknown.

Dr. Jordan did not reveal what President Wilson said to him, but the president several times has taken the position that he will be glad to do anything of a practical nature to end the war. Dr. Jordan refused to predict whether the peace efforts would be successful in the near future.

Dr. Jordan told the president peace advocates constantly were in touch with people in the warring countries and there were organizations activity at work in all parts of the civilized world bringing pressure to bear to end the war. Ultimately, he said, those efforts were certainly to be successful.

The Christmas season is the natural time to talk peace, Dr. Jordan declared and therefore he is expecting the plans of the peace advocates to take definite form about that time.

MISSOURI CONVICTS ROB PRISON FACTORY

Discovery of Alleged "Fence" Leads to Revelation of Daring Plot.

St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 12.—A system by which convicts in the Missouri penitentiary are able to rob the clothing factory in the prison was disclosed here today, according to the police, by the arrest of two men who had obtained a box of trousers sent from the Jefferson City prison.

One of the men arrested was Frank Beckett, of Granite City, Ill., who had receipted for the box at the railway freight station. The other was Meyer Katz, a drayman, who hauled it

According to the police story, Beckett said he had received a letter from a convict at Jefferson City stating that a box of clothing would be sent to St. Louis and that if he sold the contents satisfactorily others would be sent to him.

Katz, the drayman, said he did not know the goods were stolen.

MILLIONAIRE, ENGAGED TO WED, ENDS OWN LIFE

Memphis, Tenn., Nov. 12.—Warren M. Peabody, the young millionaire who committed suicide in Chicago last night was engaged to be married on November 16 to Miss Louise Anderson, daughter of T. Carey Anderson, of this city. The young woman is prostrated over the news of her finance's death. Mrs. Anderson declared there had been no disagreement of any kind between the young couple.

SEVEN DEATHS RESULT FROM KANSAS TORNADO

Great Bend, Kan., Nov. 12.—Another death today brought the list of dead in Wednesday night's storm here to seven. Mrs. D. S. Ferguson, wife of a restaurant keeper, whose place of business was destroyed, died just before noon in a local hospital.

The task of cleaning up the stricken district went forward rapidly today.

Thanksgiving Flowers

Do you know that it makes that spirit of Thanksgiving seem more real if you sit down to a table that has beside the usual Thanksgiving "fixin's" a few nicely arranged Flowers. If you don't, or have any doubt about it why give us your order for that Thanksgiving boquet. We have Chrysanthemums at $2.50 and $3 00 per dozen that will give the turkey that real rich finish that we all like so much. Carnations at $1.00 per dozen that makes the plum pudding taste like ambrosia. Roses at $1 50 and $1 75 that makes the apple and mince pies taste like those mother used to make.

PICKS MAXWELL FROM BIG FIELD

Big Detroit Company Chosen for New Alliance by Klemme Auto & Light Co.

NEW CARS HANDSOME

Local Organization Enthusiastic Over Prospects for Big Business.

Formal ratification has reached this city of a contract whereby the Maxwell car is to be handled here by Klemme Auto & Light Co. This ratification was the conclusion of negotiations which had been informally closed some time ago.

By the terms of this arrangement bringing as it does an active and ample organization to the Maxwell army, adequate representation for this popular-priced car is assured here. While the present contract runs for one year only, the solid permanence of the parties interested gives ground for the belief that relations will be of indefinite length of time. Such is, in fact, a characteristic feature of Maxwell agencies all over the country.

The entire organization of the new local Maxwell store is enthusiastic over the possibilities of the alliance.

"We took our time and looked over the whole field," said Mr. H. K. Stille, of the Klemme Auto & Light Co

"We were out to pick without the use of anything but cold common sense, the car that would make us the most money during the season of 1916, and indefinitely into the future We believe we have gotten the best one in the Maxwell. While the dealer's margin of profit on a $655 car is small, the market is immense and the volume of sales assured, in case the car stands up and gives satisfaction We know that the Maxwell will do this. The Maxwell cars of last year and the season before gained the reputation for beauty, power and efficiency second to none in the light-car field. This year's car is handsomer, larger and more efficient than ever before, as we thoroughly convinced ourselves before signing our contract Best of all, it fulfills in a gratifying way its legitimate heritage of sturdiness—a quality for which Maxwells have been famous for many years of motoring history.

"We have made ample arrangements for a service department, designed to keep every Maxwell car in our territory at its top efficiency all the time In this detail we have been greatly helped by the factory organization which has developed a plan of supply to dealers that has shown itself adequate and prompt"

STOP CATARRH! OPEN NOSTRILS AND HEAD

Says Cream Applied in Nostrils Relieves Head-Colds at Once.

If your nostrils are clogged and your head is stuffed and you can't breathe freely because of a cold or catarrh, just get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm at any drug store. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic cream into your nostrils and let it penetrate through every air passage of your head, soothing and healing the inflamed, swollen mucous membrane and you get instant relief.

Ah! how good it feels. Your nostrils are open, your head is clear, no more hawking, snuffling, blowing; no more headache, dryness or struggling for breath. Ely's Cream Balm is just what sufferers from head colds and catarrh need. It's a delight.

BILL BONE, FOLK-ENTERTAINER

Bill Bones' evening progeams are not entire evenings of tiresome verse. While he gives many quaint dialect poems that will bring the tear or the hearty laugh—they are so beautifully interwoven into a humorous, philosophical, common sense lecture that you never tire.

He takes a theme or subject and sticks to it, fitting his humor, pathos and poetry in and around it, in a way no other entertainer does, thus giving that most desired variety that ever keeps his audience expectant, watching and pleasantly contemplating—what next?

His programs are entirely original, hence no decrepit jokes at all times giving a clean, wholesome, logical, as well as mirth provoking lecture-entertainment. And he makes good on return dates Possessing as he does a sympathetic heart, optimistic spirit, winsome manner and a homely philosophy, with a strong sense of humor, he will make you laugh, make you cry, make you think—send you away with greater faith in humanity, in God and in future civilization

Them Meistersingers.

Hiram Brown in a fictitious name, but he voiced the feeling of many patrons of the lecture course when he felt moved to produce the verses given below. The Meistersingers deserve all the fair things said of them, and the opportunity to hear them should not be overlooked by any one.

(Dedicated to them by "Hiram Brown")

I've hearn them Meistersingers sing
One night at our op'ra house.
They raised the roof, they did, by jing,
One night at our op'ra house!
I hitched the bays to the old turnout
After the milkin' and chorin' about,
And then 'ith plenty of laughter and shout
We druv to the op'ra house.

The house was jammed. I dew declare!
Chuck full wuz thet op'ra house
The tarnationist lot of folks wuz there—
There in thet op'ra house.
Then them fellers come on to sing
A-drest in clothes—the funniest thing
I ever did see—all in a string
On the stage of thet op'ra house.

And then come some music, I dunno where,
Right in thet op'ra house.
Seemed jest a-floatin' in the air
Right in thet op'ra house.
Seemed like an orgin jest broke loose
With the purtiest sound it could produce.
'Twas just them fellers op'nin' their sluice
Down in our op'ra house.

They sung up one side and down t'other
On the stage of thet op'ra house;
Then they'd break out all together,
Wakin' up thet op'ra house.
They made you think they'd break the winders,
Then back up and kind a-hinders
Things a spell, then smash to flinders
Things in thet op'ra house.

'Twas the greatest singin' I ever heard
In thet old op'ra house,
So plain and distinct thet ev'ry word
Wuz clear in thet op'ra house.
And the funny things! I laughed till sore;
Felt just like rollin' on the floor.
I'd never hearn the like before
In thet old opera house.

I've hearn the quartet from the county seat
In thet old op'ra hause,
And the bell ringers, they say was never beat
In thet old op'ra house,
But them Meistersingers! I want to tell!
If I go to heaven and they're—not there,
I'd ob[illegible] my abode to hear [illegible] a spel
Like [illegible] op'ra ho

WESTERN CANADA CONTINUES TO WIN

The 1915 Yield of Grain Keeps Western Canada to the Front.

The great publicity that has been given to the grain yields of the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the three provinces that comprise that portion of Western Canada east of the British Columbia boundary, has kept Canada to the front with a prominence that is merited.

The grain crop of the three provinces has now been harvested, and sufficient of it has been threshed so that it is no longer a matter of estimate as to the returns. It is safe to say that the entire yield of wheat will be upwards of 275,000,000 bushels, and the average yield well over 25 bushels per acre In proportion to the aggregate this is perhaps the largest yield ever known on the continent.

Most of this wheat will grade No. 1 northern and better and with present prices the condition of the farmer is to be envied Many individual yields are reported and verified, and they are almost beyond belief, but they go to show that under the careful system of agriculture that produced these yields Western Canada would have far exceeded a 300,000,000 production of wheat in 1915 had the system been universal

It was not in one or two districts that big yields have been made known. The reports come from all parts of the 24,000 square miles of territory in which he growing of wheat is carried on

Mr Elmar Seller a farmer south of Strassburg, Sask has harvested 5,465 bushels No. 1 hard wheat from 160 acres

Jas A Benner near Daysland Alberta, says his wheat went over 40 bushels to the acre, with an all round crop of 33 bushels to the acre.

J. N. Wagner, near the same place, also lays claim to over 40 bushels of wheat per acre

A Norwegian farmer named S. A. Tofthagen not far from Daysland, had 2[illegible] acres of wheat which gave a yield of 47 bushels to the acre

Well, then near Gleichen Alberta, D H Engle of Humboldt, Iowa, owns a quarter section of land This land was rented so that Mr Engle should receive one third of the crop, and this gave him $612 65 his net rental for the crop, and there was only 80 acres in crop

Scores of reports give yields fully as large as those given above A large field of spring wheat near Lethbridge averaged 69 bushels another 59 and a third 56 bushels per acre On the Jail farm at Lethbridge 25 acres of Marquis wheat yielded 60 bushels to the acre and weighed 67 pounds to the bushel. A test lot of one acre of Marquis wheat when threshed yielded 49 bushels and a 30 acre field averaged 60 1-3 bushels. This farm had 200 acres under crop to Marquis wheat and it is expected the average from the whole will exceed 50 bushels

In all portions of Saskatchewan and Manitoba, as well remarkable yields are reported, many large fields showing averages of from 40 to 55 bushels per acre

When the story of this year's threshing is completed some extraordinary yield will be heard of One farmer west of Unity, Saskatchewan, threshed 10,000 bushels of No 1 northern from 200 acres and such instances will not be isolated

Considerable of the wheat grown in Western Canada is finding its way to the markets of the United States, notwithstanding the duty of ten cents per bushel The miller in the United States finds Western Canadian wheat necessary for the blending of the high class flour that is demanded by some millers Already nearly a hundred thousand bushels of the 1915 crop has found its way to the Minneapolis, Duluth, St Louis and other markets

It was not in wheat alone that there were extraordinary yields A farmer living south of Wilkena, Sask., harvested 900 bushels of oats from ten acres S A Tofthagen of Daysland before referred to had oats which yielded 110 bushels to the acre, while those of J N Wagner went 90 bushels to the acre

As is pointed out by a Toronto paper Canada's great good fortune and splendid service as the Granary of the Empire are revealed in the record harvest from her rich fields of wheat and other grains "The foundation of its prosperity is solid and enduring. While mines may be exhausted and lumber may disappear through improvident management, agriculture is a perpetual source of wealth, increasing from year to year by the stimulus of individual industry and personal interest. A wheat harvest of 336,250,000 bushels from 13,000,000 acres, an average yield of 26 bushels to the acre. The substantial nature of this growth in production is shown by the fact that the harvest returns are 72 per cent greater than the average for the past five years.

The same satisfactory and highly important success has been attained in other grain crops. The aggregate yield of oats is 481,035,500 bushels from the 11,365,000 acres under crop. Of this yield 305,680,000 bushels are from the three Prairie Provinces These provinces also contribute 304,200,000 bushels of wheat. The barley harvest is 50,868,000 bushels from 1,509,350 acres, an average yield of 33.7 bushels per acre

"The impression one gets in going through Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba!" said a traveler from the East, "is that all the horses and teams and all the threshing machines engaged make no impression on the crops, and that it will take six months to thresh the grain out, but two weeks ago the Canadian Pacific railway were having a daily shipment of 1,700 cars of wheat from the three provinces, and a week ago they had got up to 2,100 cars a day And besides this there is the Canadian Northern railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific, so an enormous quantity must be being shipped out of the provinces. The wealthier farmers are building large granaries on their farms, while there is a great improvement in the storage facilities provided by the government."

It is therefore no wonder that the greatest interest was shown by those who attended the Soil Products Exposition held at Denver a short time ago, when it was demonstrated that it was not only in quantity that Western Canada still occupied the primary position. It was there that Western Canada again proved its supremacy. In wheat, it was early conceded that Canada would be a winner, and this was easily the case, not only did it win the big prize, but it carried off the sweepstakes. What, however to those who were representing Canada at this exposition, was of greater value probably, was winning first and second prize for alfalfa. The exhibits were beautiful and pronounced by old alfalfa growers to be the best they had ever seen. First, second and third cuttings of this year's growth were shown.

At this same exposition, there were shown some excellent samples of fodder corn, grown in the Swift Current district

Topping the range cattle market in Chicago a short time ago is another of the feats accomplished by Western Canada this year.

On Wednesday, October 13, Clay, Robinson and company sold at Chicago for E. H. Maunsell, Macleod, Alberta a consignment of cattle, 17 head of which, averaging 1,420 pounds, brought $8 90 per hundredweight, topping the range cattle market for the week to date. The same firm also sold for Mr Maunsell 206 head, averaging 1,240 pounds, at $8.55, without a throwout. These were all grass cattle They were purchased by Armour and company Clay, Robinson and company describe the cattle as of very high quality, in excellent condition, and a great credit to Mr Maunsell It speaks well for our Canadian cattle raisers that they can produce stock good enough to top the Chicago market against strong competition, there being over 4,000 range cattle on sale that day

It is one thing to produce crops such as are referred to and another, to get them to market. The facilities of Western Canada are excellent. The railway companies, of which there are three, the Canadian Pacific, the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific, bear the mark of efficiency stamped upon all their work Besides the main trunk lines of these systems, which extend from ocean to ocean, there are branch lines and laterals, feeders which enter into remote parts of the farming districts, and give to the farmer immediate access to the world's grain markets. The elevator capacity of the country is something enormous, and if the figures can be digested, the full extent of the grain producing powers of Western Canada may be realized. The total elevator capacity is about 170,000,000 bushels, or nearly one-half of the entire wheat production of the Dominion in 1915. Of this large storage facilities the country elevators number 2,800, with a capacity of 95,000,000 bushels.—Advertisement.

"I knew him well. He will speak in his own good time. A strange, unaccountable man, John. A secret man. I have been thinking of him in the last few days, thinking a great deal. Perhaps you will not mind saying to him that I have expressed a desire to come and see him some day. He will hear you."

He left Payson standing there, staring after him with a look of wonder in his eyes.

* * * *

Joan Bright went up to the grey house on the hill with the two Midthornes. In the dim old library she abruptly faced Eric, holding out her hands to him. There were tears of utter joy and gladness in her eyes.

"Eric," she said softly, "I truly believe I am the only one who has not changed. I am still just what I was in the beginning."

He lifted her hands to his lips. "Love does not change," he said, a deep thrill in his voice. "It goes on just the same until it is killed, but it does not change while it is alive. Love is life, that is the secret of it. Ah, it is good to be alive, after all. Yesterday I could have died. Today I shudder at the thought of it. I love today because you are the very heart of it, you are the life of it. It throbs with you, Joan darling. Today I love life because I love you."

"And because I love you," she added.

Mary was a silent, enchanted listener. Her eyes glowed with the deep, mysterious light, her lips moved with their lips.

She waited until he took Joan in his arms. Then she stole quietly from the room. They did not hear, they did not see. They had forgotten her She went upstairs and took up the portrait of a man from her dressing table. She kissed it and held it tight to her breast, and was no longer lonely.

At last Joan remembered. With a quick start of confusion she released herself from Eric's arms, and turned a burning face, expecting to meet the smile of the girl who had come into the library with them

"Oh, I wonder—" she began, after a searching glance about the room which revealed no living witness to the ancient encounter

She straightened her hat "What a dear, dear girl she is!"

CHAPTER XXIII

THE CUP IS FULL

Jabez Carr sat outside his cottage on a warm spring afternoon a fortnight after the trial of Eric Midthorne There had been six funerals at the Seaman's home during the past two days, and Jabez was reflective Something certainly was wrong at headquarters He could not understand why the grim reaper had been allowed such privileges. Gross neglect on somebody's part; that was quite clear Six in two days! Why, said he to himself it must have been downright criminal carelessness on the part of the confounded ship's surgeon letting able bodied healthy people die like that Not one of them was a day over 75 he calculated not a single one of them. There had been no epidemic that he was aware of—no cholera, no small pox no anything that you could put your finger on. Then what the deuce did it mean down there, letting people die before their time? There ought to be an investigation, a very rigid one, said Jabez firmly Some to think of it like Beason, bo's'n was nigh onto seventy he was as spry as a rabbit the last time he came up to the gate What business had he to be dying?

Somehow, without really giving a thought to it the ancient gate sought out the only spot where the sunshine struck brightly through the tree tops, and there he placed his stool It occurred to him that the warm sun was unusually grateful to his bones No doubt, it was the gloom of those six funerals that had got into his marrow, but there was no getting around the fact that the sunshine had a most pleasing effect.

The sun's rays struck the corner of the cottage where the rain barrel stood So it was there that he put his stool With rare inconsistency he leaned his back against the damp staves of the barrel, and smoked his pipe in blissful contempt of the rheumatism and other ills that lay behind him Sunshine' No one ever came to grief by getting too much sunshine; that is, if one didn't overdo it. The days seemed shorter than they used to be anyway, thought Jabez. You could get up at sunrise, attend to a few things here and there, and the first thing you knew the sun was setting. And the nights, too, seemed shorter of late. Better get what little sunshine there was, said he.

But six in two days! Yes, sir, there was something radically wrong somewhere. He sat up suddenly, confronted by an uncanny question would there be more funerals on the morrow?

The squirrels frisked about him unnoticed. They sat up on their tails and waited with admirable patience for him to hurl sticks at them. They listened for the mild epithets with which he hectored them.

But he puffed on at his cold pipe, and his thoughts were far away.

A strong voice called out a greeting to him. He awoke from his long reverie with a start. The sun had moved away from the rain barrel and gleamed warm against the cottage wall, a dozen paces to the left.

Four young people were standing before him. He rubbed his eyes, blinked and then shook the tobacco from his pipe.

"What day is this?" he asked hazily, coming to his feet.

"Sunday, Uncle Jabe," said Eric

He looked relieved. "There won't be any today," he said. "They never have 'em on Sundays." With which, the thought of funerals passed away His face brightened. The jolly twinkle returned into his eyes. A vast politeness seized him.

"Glad to see you, glad to see you," he exclaimed. "Here, Eric, and you, Jack, trundle out them rockers for the young ladies. Be spry about it. Scat' You little divils!" This to the joyous squirrels. "I'm uncommon pleased to see you, Miss Joan. It's a great honor." He carefully wiped his hand on his trousers leg, and extended it to meet hers. He then shook hands with Mary, going farther, however, to pat the little fingers with his free hand, a feat which compelled him to restore the pipe to his lips, where it wobbled uncertainly, deprived of its usual support. "Someone has been tellin' me of the weddings that is to be. For the life of me, I can't tell who it was."

"It was I, Uncle Jabe," said Eric, coming up with one of the chairs.

"So it was," said Jabez, visibly relieved. "I'm gettin' so danged forgetful. Well, Jack, how is Adam today"

"Very comfortable," said Payson. "He sends his love to you."

"Fine boy, Adam is—a wonderful boy," mused the ancient. "Set down, gir—young ladies. Git out o' this daag ye!" He clapped his hands vigorously upon his legs and several audacious quadrupeds scutted off in amazement but not in fear. "Double weddings is good luck, powerful good luck," he went on, drawing up his stool. "Except in one case I remember of. That was when Dick Fink, as fine a chap as ever lived, had a double wedding all of his own. He got married twice in one week to different gals in different ports. Well, sir, when them two gals found out what he'd been up to, they turned in and got him put in gaol an' made life so miserable for him that he was glad to go to the penitentiary for five years. When did you leave New York, Jack?"

"Yesterday."

"I suppose she's all there? I must go down an' have a look at her one o' these days. I ain't been to New York since the war, 40 odd years ago. Let's see, Eric, you said June, didn't you?"

"The 10th of June, at Uncle Horace's house. You will come to see us married, of course?"

Mr Carr looked dubious "If I can get someone to tend gate for me. I don t know as I can get anyone, though. Maybe there won't be anyone left by that time. What's this I hear about old Presbrey being made boss of the new library? That's all wrong. It hadn't ought to be. That's just plain cussed interference by Horace Blagden. This here new preacher, Mr. King, is the right man for the place. He's a splendid feller. I had no idee a preacher could be such a gentleman. See this here new pipe? Well, sir, he brought it down to me last week with a dozen packages o' Yale mixture. Says he, it ain't wrong to smoke, any more'n it is to eat. By ginger, I don't see what's come over the church these days. Old Prebyrey used to say I'd go to hell if I smoked. I told him once I'd sooner be in hell smokin' than in heaven not doin' it. No, sir' A man o' them narrow idees ain't got no business runnin' a public library. He'll make a terrible mess of it, he will. Why, how can a feller read without a pipe in his mouth? It's—" Words failed him. He waved his hands to complete the opinion

Four very happy young people laughed aloud, greatly to his dismay. He mumbled an apology and got up to shoo the squirrels away.

Next time that little cuss comes pestern' around you, Miss Joan, hit him a good one side the head," he remarked gruffly.

I wouldn t strike it for the world," cried Joan

"You'd better not," said Jabez sharply before he could think.

His subsequent humility was wonderful to behold.

"Can you gues, Uncle Jabe," began Eric, "what we'd all like, most of anything in the world?"

His eyes twinkled. "Yes, sir, I do know said he with a fine wink. The girls blushed

"We've come to spend the afternoon listening to those good old stories of yours," said Eric hastily "That's what we want. Joan has never heard your tell stories."

"I want to hear the very best you [illegible] wonderful head of yours, [illegible]" said John.

"[illegible] the one about the pirate—" began Mary eagerly

Jabez shook his head

"They was all lies—terrible, ungodly lies," he said very solemnly It's wrong to tell 'em

"We know they are lies," cried Mary That's always understood at the beginning and that's why we love them so dearly

"No, sir said Jabez firmly "I can't do it It ain't right. Mr King has been talkin' to me about rectitude and honor in old age He says it's wrong to lie, specially at my time o' life So I guess I'll have to disappoint you"

They were disappointed. "Just one or two, Uncle Jabe" pleaded Joan "We'll never ask it of you again. Two or three whoppers won't hurt, I am sure, if we know they—"

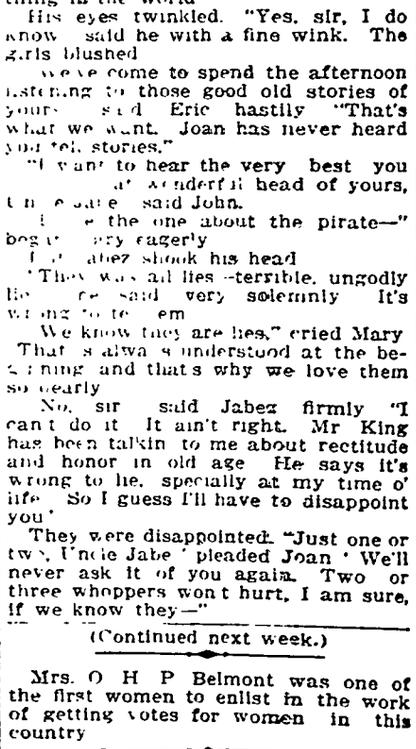
HOLDS WORLD LAW FIRM, DESPITE WAR



James Brown Scott.

"The recurrence of war affords no more reason for losing faith in international law than the recurrence of private crime would be a justification for abolishing domestic law and substituting a reign of internal anarchy," says James Brown Scott, secretary of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, in the 1915 year book of the endowment recently published.

RUSSIAN PRISONERS TELL OF HARDSHIPS

Petrograd, (by mail).—British Red Cross Commissioner Ernest Hart, in a report to Prince Oldenberg, patron of all sanitary work in Russia, contrasts the good appearance and general healthfulness of German prisoners of war with the distressful condition of Russian war prisoners returning from Germany, at the time of their exchange at Torneo on the Swedish frontier. Commissioner Hart visited Torneo at the special request of Prince Oldenberg to witness the transfer, towards the end of August.

His report follows:

"In the large new school house at Torneo I found 247 invalid or disabled men (Austrian and German) was excellently accommodated, the wards being large, airy and scrupulously clean, the beds very comfortable, with ample room between each, and the food consisting of nourishing soup with meat, another dish of meat and wholesome bread in good quantity.

"I spoke to several prisoners, who were grateful for the treatment they had received both on the journey from Petrograd and at the hospital. They were cleanly and physically in as good condition as the injuries they had received in battle permitted. That is to say they were well nourished. Where their own clothing was deficient or worn out they had received fresh clothing including a warm overcoat, a cap and often boots.

"I saw these men sent away across the border the same evening and the arrangements for removing them by wagons, stretchers and boats furnished with necessary conveniences and protected from the weather left nothing to be desired on the score of humanity. I also crossed into Haparanda and inspected the arrangements of the Swedish Red Cross under Dr. Nauchkoff, who spoke very highly of the completeness and humanity of the treatment of the injured prisoners of war by the Russian authorities. It was very clear that the Swedish authorities did not hold the same favorable opinion of the treatment of Russian prisoners by the Germans, and I was informed at Haparanda that they were sent out of Germany in a painfully dirty and neglected condition, often half naked and half starved.

"I had the opportunity of verifying these reports the next morning, when about 250 Russian prisoners arrived from Germany. Several of the men were wearing the same cotton clothing given out to them in the hospital, with worn out slippers on their feet and no socks, and they had traveled in this condition from Koenigsberg, in Germany, through Sweden and into Russian territory at Torneo. Many of the men were like scare crows so ragged and filthy was their condition, and one was clothed in the uniform of a dead French prisoner of war. They were thin and weak and said that they had been half starved during the imprisonment. They produced samples of the bread that was given them, it being extremely hard and mouldy and mixed with potatoes and even particles of straw They said little or no meat was given them in the thin soup served out to them daily. In addition they had been subjected to severe punishment for alleged breaches of discipline despite their maimed and disabled condition, the punishment including their being compelled to stand on barrels for hours at a time, or being tied to posts with their arms above their heads. They were also frequently struck by their German guards with the butts of their rifles or the flat of their swords.

"One of the worst features of the condition of the returned Russian prisoners was the number of cases of tuberculosis. These numbered some 60 out of the 250 men returned and I was told that the usual number was about 20 per cent. The cases of tuberculosis among German and Austrian prisoners on the other hand, were only 5 to 6 per cent out of the total of 1,250 already exchanged. Some of the returned Russian prisoners had lost their feet while in prison in Germany, from frost bites due to exposure. There have been no such cases among the German and Austrian prisoners in Russia, and I have had the opportunity of seeing and conserving with these prisoners in Moscow and other parts of Russia which I have visited during my journeys in Poland, Galicia, Mid-Russia and the Caucasus."

The Spirit of the Serb

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

Women and children are fighting for Serbia against the Germans. Some travelers who have complained of the discomforts and found the roads too rough for easy motoring have failed to bear in mind, perhaps, that Serbia is at war. But the Serbians know—and "these are they which have come out of great tribulations." It is reported from Berlin that "the contour of the country offered great difficulties." That contour includes cornfields, potato patches, little tiled houses and women and children It is indeed annoying that siege guns on their way to Stamboul should have to stop to expostulate with these mad lovers of their country, like the little sergeant major of Nish, 12 years old, who has been three times wounded. Soon Kultur will kill him and pass on.

Economy of Preparedness.

From the Minneapolis Journal.

An earnest pacifist points to the fact that the nearly perfect preparedness of Germany did not save that nation from war The answer to this is obvious. Not one of the allied nations was in warlike fitness. The unreadiness of France, England and Russia was an invitation and a temptation which Germany, at the apex of 40 years of military preparation, could not resist.

The true cause of this incredible conflict was that Germany, herself the only nation in Europe ready for war, refused to permit her great neighbors to begin to get ready. For nearly half a century Germany had held a monopoly on "preparedness," even as she had built up an industrial mastery of the business of manufacturing great guns, munitions and transportation vehicles, and she would not tolerate even the incipiency of like activities by powerful rival nations.

The billions which England is now pouring into the war chests of Russia, France and her lesser allies, added to the enormous sums hastily squandered in the incredible emergency by all the unprepared government is the best demonstration of the actual economy of timely and rational preparation, as ecompared with the feverish waste and extravagant methods necessitated by the desperate situation in which the allies find themselves.

Suffrage Knows No Defeat.

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

Suffrage knows no defeat. What of Pennsylvania? It has the ineffable pleasure of standing with New Jersey and Massachusetts and New York. Presumably, if Pennsylvania had gone for suffrage it would have been pointed out as a mollycoddle among the states. Presumably Pennsylvania is sitting now in the high places. To what purpose?

Actually Pennsylvania has been defeated. It was given the chance of importing into its political life a force which is clean and fresh and vigorous in the interests of good government. It has refused to take that chance. It was given an opportunity for an experiment in democracy. That opportunity was rejected. The time had come when politics might become enormously interesting, even thrilling. The time had come when all the enthusiasm of the citizens might have been called on in the service of the state, because a new element had entered into its administration.

But the suffragists, treated with scant courtesy, are not through. They do not know defeat, and with clear eyes see victory around the corner of the next election.

A Detective Story

Author of "The Holladay Case," "The Marathon Mystery," "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet," etc.

CHAPTER I

THE FALLING STAR

I was genuinely tired when I got back to the office the Wednesday afternoon, for it had been a trying day—the last of the series of trying days which had marked the progress of the Minturn ... and my feeling of depression ... Our victory had ... been nearly so complete as I had ... would be. Besides there was ... always, during the past 10 days ... had been the hottest unprecedented ... for June, with the thermometer ... and ... day.

As I threw off ... hat and dropped ... my desk, ... quivering ... from the ... away and ... to evoke a ... breath of ... in the ... breeze of ... gossipy ... sewing girls ... Fountains ... sprinkle ... The ... Pools ... and then I ... door had ... opened. I ... my eyes to see the office boy ... astonishment ... and ... boy and ... my chair ... I turned to ... with an interest the reverse of ... The words of Henley ... and running through my ...

"Out of the night ... Wet stone ... The book of ... With wealth."

Again I ... in the corridor ... and ... boy appeared.

Mr Godfrey ... said and close upon the words Jim Godfrey entered looking as ... and ... invigorating as the fountains ... and pools ...

"How ... asked as he ...

"... what

"... Kid ...

"... night ... Do you?

I ... as I ... of the ... ferno ... my ...

"I haven't ... slept for a week. I ...

"Well ... ing it? That's ... I saw you in court this afternoon ... night was enough.

"Yes, I ... would be. But what's ... I ... at the ... lean ... for ... on the far edge of the Bronx ... to take you up with me ... and I'm going to show you the ... Hudson. That will give you five ... four days' rest. Don't you think you deserve it?"

"Yes," I ... do, and ... the affairs of the office. With the Minturn ... on ... I ... before ... son with ... dress ...

"You'll come then," said Godfrey ... "Don't ... that I said ... That ... it final.

I looked at him for ... a ... slightly ... his eyes were very bright.

"Won't I ...

"No," he said, "for I've discovered certain ... in the neighborhood which I ... will interest you."

When Godfrey ... in that tone he could mean ... one thing, and my last vestige of hesitation vanished.

"All right," I said. "I'll come."

"Good! I'll call for you at the Marathon ... about 10 ... That's the earliest I can get away," ... and in another moment he was gone.

So was my fatigue, and I turned with a zest to my letters and to the arrangements ... for ... three days' absence. Then I went up to my rooms, put a few things into a suit case, got into fresh clothes, ... to the Astor roof garden for dinner, and a little after 10 was back again at the Marathon. I had Higgins bring my luggage down and sat down in the entrance porch to wait for Godfrey.

Just across the street gleamed the lights of the police station where he and I had had more than one adventure. For Godfrey was the principal police reporter of the Record, ... was to him that journal owed those brilliant and glowing columns in which the latest mystery was described and dissected in a way which was a joy alike to the intellect and to the artistic instinct. For the editorial policy of the Record, its attitude toward politics, Wall street, the trusts, society, I had only aversion and disgust, but whenever the town was stirred with a great criminal mystery I never missed an issue.

Godfrey and I had been thrown together first in the Holladay case, and that was the beginning of a friendship which had strengthened with the years. Then came his brilliant work in solving the Marathon mystery, in which I had also become involved. I had appealed to him for help in connection with that affair at Elizabeth; and he had cleared up the remarkable circumstances surrounding the death of my friend, Philip Vantine, in the affair of the Boule cabinet. So I had come to turn to him instinctively whenever I found myself confronting one of those intricate problems which every lawyer has sometimes to untangle.

Reciprocally, Godfrey sometimes sought my assistance, but, of course, it was only with a very few of his cases that I had any personal connection. The others I had to be content to follow, as the general public did, in the columns of the Record, certain that it would be the first to reach the goal. Godfrey had a peculiar advantage over the other police reporters in that he had himself, years before, been a member of the detective force, and had very carefully fostered and extended the friendships made at that time. He was looked on rather as an insider, and he was always scrupulously careful to give the members of the force every bit of credit they deserved—sometimes considerably more than they deserved. In consequence, he had the entree at times when other reporters were rigorously barred.

It was nearly 11 o'clock before Godfrey arrived that evening, but I was neither surprised nor impatient. I knew how many and unexpected were the demands upon his time, and I always found a lively interest in watching the comings and goings at the station across the way—where, alas, the entrances far exceeded the exits. But finally a car swung in from the avenue at a speed that drew my eyes, and I saw that Godfrey was driving it.

"Jump in," he said, pushing out his clutch and pausing at the curb; and as I grabbed my suitcase and sprang to the seat beside him, he let the clutch in again and we were off. "No time to lose," he added, as he changed into high, and turned up Seventh avenue.

At the park, he turned westward to the circle, and then northward again out Amsterdam avenue. There was little traffic, and we were soon skimming along at a speed which made me watch the cross streets fearfully. In a few minutes we were across the Harlem and running northward along the uninteresting streets beyond. At this moment, it occurred to me that Godfrey was behaving singularly as ... ough he were hast ning to keep an appointment, but I judged it best not to distract his attention from the street before us, and restrained the question which rose to my lips.

At last the built-up portion of the town was left behind, we passed little houses in little yards, then meadows and gardens and strips of woodland, with a house only here and there. We were no longer on a paved street, but on a macadam road—a road apparently little used, for our lamps, sending long streamers of light ahead of us, disclosed far empty stretches, without vehicle of any kind. There was no moon, and the stars were half obscured by a haze of cloud, while along the horizon to the west, I caught the occasional glow of distant lightning.

And then the sky was suddenly blotted out, and I saw that we were running along an avenue of lofty trees. The road at the left was bordered ... a high stone wall, evidently the boundary of an important estate. We were soon past this and I felt the speed of the car slacken.

"Hold tight," said Godfrey, as he turned sharply through an open gateway and brought the car to a stop. Then, snatching out his watch, he raised it forward and held it in the glare of the side lamp. "Five minutes to ... he said. "We can just make it. ... Later."

He sprang from the car, and I followed, realizing that this was no time for questions.

"This way," he said, and held out a hand to me or I should have lost him in the darkness. We were in a grove of lofty trees, and at the foot of one of these, Godfrey paused. "Up with ... added, and don't lose any ... and he placed my hand upon the rung of a ladder.

Too amazed to open my lips, I obeyed. The ladder was a long one, ... I went up and up. I could feel ... mounting after me. I am not expert at climbing ladders, even by ... and my progress was not rapid enough to suit my companion, for he kept urging me on. But at last, with a breath of relief, I felt that I had reached the top.

"... now," I asked.

"... you see that big ... straight limb ... out to your right?"

"Yes," I said, for my eyes were growing accustomed to the darkness. "I ... sit down on it, and hold on to the ...

I did so somewhat gingerly, and in a minute Godfrey was beside me.

"Now," he said in a voice low and tense with excitement, "look out straight ahead. And remember to hold on to the ladder."

I could see the hazy mist of the open sky, and from the fitful light along the horizon I knew that we were looking toward the west. Below me was a mass of confused shadows, which I took for clumps of shrubbery.

Then I felt Godfrey's hand close upon my arm.

"Look," he said.

For an instant, I saw nothing; then my eyes caught what seemed to be a new star in the heavens, a star bright, sharp, steel blue—

"Why, it's moving!" I cried.

He answered with a pressure of the fingers.

The star was indeed moving; not rising nor drifting with the breeze, but descending, descending slowly, slowly.

I watched it with parted lips, leaning forward, my eyes straining at that falling light.

"Falling" is not the word; nor is "drifting." It did not fall and it did not drift. It deliberately descended, in a straight line, at a regular speed, calmly and evenly, as though animated by some definite purpose. Lower and lower it sank; then it seemed to pause, to hover in the air, and the next instant it burst into a shower of sparks and vanished.

And those sparks fell upon the shoulders of two white-robed figures, standing apparently in space, their arms rigidly extended, their faces raised toward the heavens.

CHAPTER II.

A STRANGE NEIGHBOR.

Mechanically I followed Godfrey down the ladder, and, guided by the flaring lights, made my way back to the car. I climbed silently into my seat, while Godfrey started the motor. Then we rolled slowly up the driveway, and stopped before the door of a house standing deep among the trees.

"Wait for me here a minute," Godfrey said, and, when I had got out, handed me my suitcase, and then drove the car on past the house, no doubt to its garage.

He was soon back, opened the house door, switched on the lights, and waved me in.

"Here we are," he said. "I'll show you your room," and he led the way up the stairs, opening a door in the hall at the top. "This is it," he added, and switched on the lights here also. "The bathroom is right at the end of the hall. Wash up, if you need to, and then come down, and we will have a good night smoke."

It was a pleasant room, with the simplest of furniture. The night breeze ruffled the curtains at the windows, and filled the room with the cool odor of the woods—how different it was from the odor of dirty asphalt! But I was in no mood to linger there—I wanted an explanation of that strange light and of those two white robed figures. So I paused only to open my grip, change into a lounging coat, and brush off the dust of the journey. Then I hastened downstairs.

Godfrey met me at the stair foot, and led the way into what was evidently a lounging room. A tray, containing some cold meat, bread and butter, cheese, and a few other things, stood on a side table, and to this Godfrey added two bottles of Bass.

"No doubt you're hungry after the ride," he said. "I know I am," and he opened the bottles. "Help yourself," and he proceeded to make himself a sandwich. "You see, I live the simple life out here. I've got an old couple to look after the place—Mr and Mrs. Hargis. Mrs. Hargis is an excellent cook—but to ask her to stay awake till midnight would be fiendish cruelty. So she leaves me a lunch in the ice box, and goes quietly off to bed. I'll give you some berries for breakfast such as you don't often get in New York—and the cream—wait till you try it! Have a cigar?"

"No," I said, sitting down very content with the world, "I've got my pipe," and I proceeded to fill up.

Godfrey took down his own pipe from the mantle shelf and sat down opposite me. A moment later, two puffs of smoke circled toward the ceiling.

"Now," I said looking at him, "go ahead and tell me about it."

Godfrey watched a smoke ring whirl and break before he answered.

"About 10 days ago," he began, "just at midnight, I happened to glance out of my bedroom window, as I was turning in, and caught a glimpse of a queer light apparently sinking into the treetops. I thought nothing of it, but two nights later, at exactly the same time, I saw it again. I watched for it the next night, and again saw it—just for an instant, you understand, as it formed high in the air and started downward. The next night I was up a tree and saw more of it, but it was not until night before last that I found the place from which the whole spectacle could be seen. The trees are pretty thick all around here, and I doubt if there is any other place from which those two figures would be visible."

"Then there were two figures?" I said, for I had begun to think that my eyes had deceived me.

"There certainly were."

"Standing in space?"

"Oh, no, standing on a very substantial roof."

"But what is it all about?" I questioned. "Why should that light descend every midnight? What is the light, anyway?"

"That's what I've brought you out here to find out. You've got four clear days ahead of you—and I'll be at your disposal from midnight on, if you happen to need me."

"But you must have some sort of idea about it," I persisted. "At least you know whose roof those figures were standing on?"

"Yes, I know that. The roof belongs to a man named Worthington Vaughan. Ever hear of him?"

I shook my head.

"Neither had I," said Godfrey, "up to the time I took this place. Even yet, I don't know very much. He's the last of an old family, who made their money in real estate, and are supposed to have kept most of it. He's a widower with one daughter. His wife died about 10 years ago, and since then he has been a sort of recluse, and has the reputation of being queer. He has been abroad a good deal, and it is only during the last year that he has lived continuously at this place next door, which is called Elmhurst. That's about all I've been able to find out. He certainly lives a retired life, for his place has a 12-foot wall around it, and no visitors need apply."

"How do you know?"

"I tried to make a neighborly call yesterday, and wasn't admitted. Mr Vaughan was engaged. Getting ready for his regular midnight hocus-pocus, perhaps."

I took a meditative puff or two.

"Is it hocus-pocus, Godfrey?" I asked, at last. "If it is, it's a mighty artistic piece of work."

"And if it isn't hocus-pocus, what is it?" Godfrey retorted. "A spiritual manifestation?"

I confess I had no answer ready. Ideas which seem reasonable enough when put dimly to oneself, become absurd sometimes when definitely clothed with words.

"There are just two possibilities," Godfrey went on. "Either it's hocus-pocus, or it isn't. If it is, it is done for some purpose. Two men don't go out on a roof every night at midnight and fire off a Roman candle and wave their arms around, just for the fun of the thing."

"It wasn't a Roman candle," I pointed out. "A Roman candle is visible when it's going up, and bursts and vanishes at the top of its flight. That light didn't behave that way at all. It formed high in the air, remained there stationary for a moment, gradually grew brighter, and then started to descend. It didn't fall, it came down slowly, and at an even rate of speed. And it didn't drift away before the breeze, as it would have done if it had been merely floating in the air. It descended in a straight line. It gave me the impression of moving as though a will actuated it—as though it had a distinct purpose. There was something uncanny about it!"

Godfrey nodded thoughtful agreement.

"I have felt that," he said, "and I admit that the behavior of the light is extraordinary. But that doesn't prove it supernatural. I don't believe in the supernatural. Especially I don't believe that any two mortals could arrange with the heavenly powers to make a demonstration like that every night at midnight for their benefit. That's too absurd!"

Fifteen female school teachers in New York city have been compelled to quit their jobs because they have tuberculosis.

The recently opened Southern Methodist university at Dallas, Tex., has established self government for the women students.

Miss Mary S. Boyd, chief of the data department of the National American Woman Suffragist association, is known as "The Woman Who Answers Questions."

With the Failures.

I want to stand with the "failures"
When the final trump is blown;
With the folks who bravely struggled,
And died unsung, unknown—
The folks who could have had riches
By swerving a bit from the right,
But toiled without thought of niches
In the glare of fame's white light.

I want to stand with the mothers
Who washed and cooked and sewed,
And 'spite of their heavy burdens
Kept on in the quiet road
Of love for a bunch of children
And care for a comfy home—
I think they'll have the best place
Beneath the judgment dome.

I want to stand with the failures
Who never did anything "great"
But learned to do without things,
To labor and to wait!
I tell you, friend, I'm certain
They learned it not in vain,
For we get what we give while living,
And many a loss is gain.

I want to stand with the conquer'd
Who strove and failed—and won—
For oft defeat is the limit
Of a victory begun.
I want to stand with the conquer'd
The maimed and bruised at heart
Who plugged on through disaster
And STUCK—to the last dull part!

I want to stand with the "failures"
Largely because I choose
The companionship of workers
Who weren't afraid to lose
The things that are held worth having
While we live this side the sleep
The things in their place the virtues
That keep and keep and keep!

WHY "ANURIC"
IS AN INSURANCE AGAINST SUDDEN DEATH!
Sufferers from Backache, Rheumatism and Kidney Trouble

Before an Insurance Company will take a risk on your life the examining physician will test the urine and report whether you are a good risk. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog, you suffer from backache, sick-headache, dizzy spells, or the twinges and pains of lumbago, rheumatism and gout. The urine is often cloudy, full of sediment; channels often get sore and sleep is disturbed two or three times a night. This is the time you should consult some physician of wide experience—such as Dr. Pierce, of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y. Send him 10 cents for sample package of his new discovery—"Anuric." Write him your symptoms and send a sample of urine for test.

Experience has taught Dr. Pierce that "Anuric" is the most powerful agent in dissolving uric acid, as hot water melts sugar, besides being absolutely harmless and is endowed with other properties, for it preserves the kidneys in a healthy condition by thoroughly cleansing them. Checks the degeneration of the blood-vessels, as well as regulating blood pressure. "Anuric" is a regular insurance and life-saver for all big meat eaters and those who deposit lime-salts in their joints. Ask the druggist for "Anuric" put up by Dr. Pierce, in 50-cent packages.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong, sick women well, no alcohol. Sold in tablets or liquid.

Nothing Unusual.

"Any pretty girls at the hotel where you spent the summer?"

"Yes, indeed," replied the man whose few remaining strands of hair were laid out to the best advantage.

OLD-TIME COLD CURE—DRINK HOT TEA!

Get a small package of Hamburg Breast Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teacup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus breaking up a cold.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

RUB RHEUMATISM FROM STIFF, ACHING JOINTS

Rub Soreness from joints and muscles with a small trial bottle of old St. Jacobs Oil

Stop "dosing" Rheumatism.

It's pain only; not one case in fifty requires internal treatment. Rub soothing, penetrating "St. Jacobs Oil" right on the "tender spot," and by the time you say Jack Robinson—out comes the rheumatic pain. "St. Jacob's Oil" is a harmless rheumatism cure which never disappoints and doesn't burn the skin. It takes pain, soreness and stiffness from aching joints, muscles and bones; stops sciatica, lumbago, backache, neuralgia.

Limber up! Get a 25 cent bottle of old-time, honest "St. Jacobs Oil" from any drug store, and in a moment you'll be free from pains, aches and stiffness. Don't suffer! Rub rheumatism away.

GRAY HAIR BECOMES DARK, THICK, GLOSSY

Look years younger! Try Grandmother's recipe of Sage and Sulphur. Everybody and nobody will know.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle for about 50 cents. Everybody uses this old, famous recipe, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

Heating Stoves

¶ Is your home amply protected against the onslaught Winter soon will make against it? If not, it is high time you were giving it consideration. The use of an old, fuel-eaten heater for even the first two months will cost you a sum that would go a long ways toward a new and economical stove.

¶ Come in and let us show you how easy it would be to have the comforts of the best heater made---a heater that will save you money every month as well as providing comfort for the whole family, a heater that a child can operate, a heater the beauty of which lends enchantment to any home.

SWEA CITY TO CONSOLIDATE

Tuesday of last week the citizens of Swea City and the farmers nearby showed that they are still in the progressive class by voting for consolidation of schools. The result was a 5 to 1 majority for consolidation. The district will be comprised of the east portion of Swea township and the west of Harrison township. This will make close to 150 consolidated distrcts within the state; Klemme and surrounding community still remains in the poor school class. What are we going to do about it, not so much the town people for we have good schools as far as the grades go but we should have an accredited high school. We are loosing good citizens ever now and then because we don't have better schools facilities and the only logical thing for both town and country is to consolidate.

Turkeys at this time of year are more susceptible to digestive disorders than any other class of domestic poultry, says G. M. Turpin of the poultry husbandry department of Iowa State college. The trouble arises as a result of changing them from their feeding on range to pen feeding where an unlimited supply of corn is available

Penning the turkeys at night and giving them a succulent bulky feed in the morning before letting them out will remedy the difficulty, says Mr Turpin. Where an unlimited supply of corn is available, cabbage, soaked alfalfa leaves or ground beets are suggested as a big part of the morning feed In addition, a mash of half wheat bran by weight and one-fourth each of wheat middlings and ground oats moistened witm an equal part of skim milk, is recommended.

Give the turkeys as much of this as they will clean up and they will not gorge themselves with corn when it will be necessary to limit the corn they have access to it. In some cases by making the cribs inaccessible or by confining the turkeys all the time.

Kossuth county papers speak in the highest terms of the "boys fair" held held last week. Some fifteen prizes were awarded to boys who raised the best corn this year. Harvey Ingham of Des Moines was there and delivered one of his excellent speeches, which he always has on hand for any occasion from a foot race to a funeral. After the corn judging they had a horse race and a game of baseball and then a tug-of-war between the east and west sides of the county, The papers say it was a success, but the attendence was too small for an occasion of so much merit and that they are going to have another next year and a bigger one for boys and girls to complete along agricultural lines,—Britt Tribune.

Bud Johnson, the young colored man working at Mort Colyer's, is laid up with a pretty sore foot, says the Larned (Kan.) Tiller and Toiler. Him and Mort were out spearing carp in the creek and Bud stuck his foot under a drift to scare out the fish. Mort seen it and thought it was a black bass drowned him. Mort says he can't afford to pay a hand that can't work, so and went after it. He speared Bud through the big toe and nearly he laid Bud off and charged him $4 a week board Hard luck, Bud.

According to a bulletin of the United States geological survey, fuller's earth was discovered in Florida in 1893 through mere accident. An effort was made to burn brick near Quincy, the effort failed, but an employe of the company called attention to the close resemblance of the clay to the German fuller's earth. Florida is now the leading state in the production of fuller's earth, having reported for 1914 more than 75 per cent of the total quantity and value.

A German chemist is working on a process which is expected to make wood pulp available as a substitute for cotton in the manufacture of high power explosives. The pulp is prepared and made into sheets much the same as in the manufacture of paper The only difficulties yet remaining arise from the fact that the material contains impurities which make the explosive uncertain and highly dangerous to handle.

T. P.'s London Weekly, in answer to a correspondent's demand for "the repatriation of all German born inhabitants of other countries," says: "This would include the duchess of Connaught, Prince Christian, the queen of Greece, the queen of Sweden, the empress of Russia, the king and queen of Rumania, the queen dowager of Holland, the queen of Denmark, the queen of Belgium and the king of Bulgaria.

Quill pens were made in the fifth century. There is no record of their earlier use. Theodoric, the Ostrogoth king, is said to have been illiterate and unable to write his own name. A golden plate was made with the letters of his name cut through it. This was placed over the document he was expected to sign, and he traced his name through the open spaces with a quill.

"I acknowledge the corn," meaning to retract, to take back, has a number of explanations, the most plausible of which is that in 1828 one Stewart, of Ohio, made a speech in congress in which he declared that Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky sent their haystacks and corn fields to New York and Philadelphia for a market. Wickliffe, of Kentucky, questioned the statement.

IOWANS SEEK SHARE IN $600,000 ESTATE OF WILLIAM GODAIR

Allege Apportionment to Club For Old People Was Made Under Pressure.

Gowrie, Ia., Nov. 20.—The children of Joseph Teter, deceased, formerly in the grain and stock business at Gowrie, a half brother of William H. Godair, a Chicago real estate broker, who died October 13, 1914, leaving an estate worth $600,000, have begun an action to break the will on the ground of undue influence.

The heirs beginning the action are George P. and Harriet Teter and Florence Adamson, of Moorland; Mrs. Margaret McAbee, of Colorado; Eugene Teter, of Vancouver, Wash., and Mrs. Ella Janson, of Chicago. If the heirs succeed in breaking the will their individual shares of the estate will amount to about $70,000. The Illinois law recognizes a half brother the same as a full brother.

In his will Godair bequeathed one-third of his estate to his wife and the remainder, amounting to about $400,000, for the establishment of an old people's club.

It is claimed in the petition that Godair, when he made his will, was under the influence of the men who drew his will and of the men named as trustees of the institution he wished to found.

Godair at one time, in partnership with his half brother, conducted a grain and stock business in Gowrie.

HORSE RACES WITH TRAIN, THEN FALLS THROUGH BRIDGE

Ida Grove, Ia., Nov. 20.—An honest, hard working, conscientious train on the C. & N. W., got into an embarrassing mess yesterday while pursuing the even tenor of its way to Ida Grove. A horse—one of those plain critters, too slow for the race track and too much of a coward to be sent to Europe—became ambitious and got on the Northwestern track about one minutee and 10 seconds ahead of the aforementioned train.

The race began The horse was in good form and fine spirits. With a snorting engine as a pacemaker, that old steed made some wonderful time. The engine chased the animal for miles and miles and miles—anyhow two. Then somebody inserted a bridge in the track and the race was over. The horse started to fall through and would have succeeded had his body been as thin as his legs. Such not being the case, the horse just stuck there.

It took the entire train crew and many volunteers from the train and nearby farms, to remove the horse and allow the train to proceed

ALL FACTIONS UNITE IN SUPPORT OF CUMMINS

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 20.—At the organization of the Des Moines Commins For President club here all shades of political faith were represented. The chairman of the meeting is a dyed in the wool standpatter; one of the three men who provided the banquet without cost to those in attendance is a democrat, many in attendance have opposed Senator Cummins in some of his campaigns. But the spirit expressed was that the middle west now has an opportunity to put forward a candidate for the high honor of president of the United States who has a fair chance of winning and regardless of past minor differences local leaders at least are determined to unite in an enthusiastic support of Senator Cummins

NORTHERN IOWA MEN ON CORNELL COLLEGE BOARD

Mount Vernon, Ia., Nov. 20.—The board of trustees of Cornell college was in session here yesterday. The forenoon was given to receiving reports and the election of officers. The following were re-elected: E. B. Soper, Emmetsburg, president, O P. Miller, Rock Rapids, vice president; W. C Stuckslager, Lisbon, treasurer. H H Freer was elected secretary to succeed Col. H. H Rood, who recently died. Plans for the building of a new central heating plant are to come under consideration before the board adjourns.

President-elect Flint will be inaugurated today.

COLORADO DECISION HITS LUTEN'S BRIDGE PATENTS

Denver, Colo., Nov 20.—The so-called cement bridge trust was dealt a severe blow today when Judge R. E. Lewis in federal court, handed down a decision against Daniel Luten, representing the National Bridge company, in a case of alleged patent infringement, in which George Washburn and Weld county, Colorado, were defendants. Attorneys for the company held that it was practically impossible to construct a reinforced concrete bridge without infringing on patents of the company

The case involved payment of royalty or commissions upon practically every cement bridge built in the United States. Similar suits have been started by Luten, it is said, in Iowa Kansas and Nebraska.

Luten will take the case to the United States circuit court of appeals, it was announced.

FOUR IOWANS QUALIFY FOR RHODES SCHOLARSHIP

Iowa City, Ia., Nov 20.—Of the six college men who took the examination at Iowa City on October 5 and 6 for the Iowa Rhodes scholarship, four were successful. They are Norman D. Scott, of Drake university; A. W. Palmer, of Grinnell; H. W. Van Pelt, of Cornell, and L. B. Cobb, of Cornell. Announcement of the result has just been received from England by President Thomas H. Macbride, of the State university.

The Rhodes scholar for 1916 will be selected from the four named, at a meeting of the committee sometime in December. All having demonstrated their scholastic ability, the final tests will be of the relative capabilities in athletic and various other activities. The winner will begin his residence at Oxford next October. From the Rhodes trust fund he will receive $1,500 a year for three years for his expenses.

ESTHERVILLE—Percy F. Harris, general foreman of the Rock Island shops and roundhouse at this point, was married Monday in Chicago to Miss Nina Ammon The wedding was a surprise to the most intimate friends of the young couple and was performed without the knowledge of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Ammon, the parents of the bride. Mr. Harris went to Chicago Saturday evening for the purpose of spending Sunday with friends and Miss Aminon was supposed to be visiting with friends at Moline. They returned to Estherville Wednesday morning and announced that they had been married in Chicago.

STATE AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT REDUCES SOUND CORN FIGURES

Only 25 Per Cent Fully Matured But 32 Per Cent Is Fit For Husking and Feed.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 20.—Iowa's corn crop will not reach the earlier estimates of the government.

A supplementary estimate of the department of agriculture just issued, shows that the Iowa crop that fully matured this year is only 25 per cent, although this is a better showing than is made in some of the other states. Wisconsin and Minnesota matured only a 10 per cent crop. North Dakota matured a 6 per cent crop. South Dakota matured a 26 per cent crop.

The report will be reproduced by the Iowa Bankers' association and sent to its members for distribution among farmers and others interested.

The state's general average is cut down by the practical failure of the corn crop this year in the northeastern section. Corn in the northwestern section is much better than the state average.

The proportion of the crop that is fit to husk in Iowa this year will be 32 per cent; in Wisconsin, 28 per cent; Minnesota, 28 per cent; North Dakota, 15 per cent, and South Dakota, 58 per cent.

The proportion of the crop this year fit for seed is Iowa, 4 per cent; Wisconsin and Minnesota, about the same; North Dakota, 2 per cent, and South Dakota, 15 per cent.

JUDGE WADE LECTURES ERRING RURAL CARRIER

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 20.—"There must be something wrong with the brain as well as with the morals of men in the postoffice service who deliberately convert or embezzle money which comes into their hands. If they had an ounce of judgment they would understand that it is impossible to escape detection"

Federal Judge Martin J. Wade emitted the foregoing late yesterday afternoon before passing sentence on Meindert Bloem, a rural mail carrier from Pella, charged with converting moneys placed in his hands by route patrons to his own use.

Bloem's case is the old story of the young man who has married and become deeply involved in debt. In his anxiety to pay his creditors, many of whom were threatening suit, the young man "lost his head," and took the money, on two different occasions, paid creditors and then made restitution to his patrons.

BRAKEMAN ACCIDENTALLY SHOOTS FELLOW WORKER

Mason City, Ia., Nov. 20.—George Calahan, a Milwaukee brakeman, was accidentally shot at McGregor yesterday from a revolver in the hands of another brakeman, Earl Lambert The bullet struck Calahan on the right cheek, just above the mouth, and came out at the back of his neck

Physicians state that the injury is not likely to result fatally Calahan was married two weeks ago to Miss Hazel Noon, of this city, and the couple had just set up housekeeping here.

According to Lambert's explanation he and Calahan had been on a little hunting trip, returning to the caboose in the McGregor yards. While sitting in the car Lambert was inspecting a new .38-caliber revolver. In some manner, unknown to Lambert, the weapon was discharged and the bullet struck Calahan, who was sitting opposite.

The two men are warm friends and Lambert was fairly frantic over the accident

BOY SEVERELY SHOCKED FROM "JOKE" CIRCUIT

Perry, Ia., Nov 20.—A joke perpetrated by an employe of a local electrical company came near resulting in the death of an 11-year-old boy, Bernard Hohenshelt, of this city The lad was rendered unconscious, but was revived in a short time, although he still feels the effects of the experience.

The electrical employe sought to frame up a joke on another employe by affixing wires so that his friend would receive a slight shock when he took hold of the door latch The wire to the latch carried 110 volts of electricity and when the Hohenshelt lad took hold of the handle he was unable to let go until he fell to the floor unconscious.

PICTURE MACHINE EXPLODES AND KILLS OPERATOR

Nevada, Ia., Nov 20.—While Herman P. Lander, of Warsaw, Ill., a moving picture machine operator, was demonstrating one of his machines at the home of his parents, southwest of Slater, Ia., the tank of the machine exploded and inflicted a deep gash in Lander's stomach and he died almost instantly. His brother, who was standing nearby, was thrown a considerable distance. He had arrived from Illinois about 10 days previous.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 20 The Iowa supreme court today handed down the following decisions

Werner vs. Fraternal Bankers & Reserve society, appellant, Linn county, reversed.

Chamberlain vs. city of Des Moines, appellant, Polk county, affirmed

CHEROKEE—Caleb Bunn, a veteran of the civil war, and a pioneer of Cherokee county, died at his home in this city as the result of a stroke of paralysis Mr Bunn located at Washta in 1871, and for many years after was one of the most successful farmers in Silver township Twelve years ago he retired and located in this city

WATERLOO—Lanfear Knapp, of Cedar Falls, for 44 years justice of the peace and clerk of Cedar Falls township, the oldest officeholder in the middle west, was stricken with apoplexy at his office and taken home in an unconscious condition He is 90 years old, and came to this county in 1853. For nearly 40 years he was city assessor.

EMERSON—Jennette, the 2-year-old daughter of Mr and Mrs. Robert Honeyman, living southeast of Emerson, was fatally burned when she became overbalanced and sat in a pail of boiling hot water. The little one lived only a few hours.

KINGSLEY—Kingsley has formed a commercial club of 110 members. The organization will boost for better roads and an electric light plant. The officers are President, John Ebelheiser, secretary, Roy Hess, treasurer, Will Rieke.

Nero, who was nearsighted, had a small transparent jewel, probably an accidentally formed lens, through which he watched the sports in the arena. The principle of the lens not being known, the power of the jewel was supposed to be of magical origin, and the gem was regarded as a very wonderful talisman.

DAVISON SAYS POLK ONLY COUNTY WHICH GRANTS EXEMPTIONS

Mixup In Executive Council Is Indicated Over Action to Demand Payments.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 19.—What is the mystery behind the letter sent by A. H. Davison, secretary of the state executive council to Attorney General Cosson, instructing the department of justice to proceed to collect from Polk county the state taxes due from manufacturing plants which were granted exemption of taxes as an inducement to locate in Des Moines.

W. S. Allen, secretary of state, and F. S. Shaw, auditor of state, say that the executive council has taken no action on the Polk county tax matter. They say they know nothing about it.

Nevertheless A. H. Davison, secretary of the executive council, yesterday said that the council three weeks ago adopted a resolution requiring the attorney general to collect the back taxes from Polk county. He said that a letter to that effect is now in the attorney general's office.

Davison and Joseph Wall, head of the county accounting department of the state, yesterday disagreed radically on the policy the state should pursue with regard to collecting back taxes on property which has been exempted for a period of years.

The council's secretary said that he had written to every county in the state and that Polk county is the only county which admitted having exempted property from taxation as an inducement to locate.

"Oh, fiddlesticks," declared Wall. "There is not a county in the state of Iowa that has not exempted property just as was done in Des Moines. If you intend to collect back taxes from Polk county, you must proceed against all of the other counties as well. There is not a law on the statute books which was as universally ignored over the state as the tax law with regard to exemptions."

"FLYNN FARM" MAY BE REGULAR PENITENTIARY

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 19.—While the state board of control has turned the Flynn farm near Des Moines over to Warden Sanders to be operated until further notice as a prison industry, W J Dixon, chairman of the board, favors retaining the property as a prison farm and gradually transferring the Fort Madison penitentiary to the site if a custodial farm is not established by the general assembly

The Fort Madison penitentiary is too far to one corner of the state," said Mr Dixon "It is very expensive to take prisoners there If that penitentiary were abandoned and a prison farm established in the center of the state, it would be better for the state and it could be operated at less expense."

ESTIMATE LOSS OF $442,000 FROM FIRE AT CLINTON

Clinton, Ia., Nov 19—Fire, which threatened the entire business district here today caused a loss estimated at $442,000, entirely destroying the buildings and stocks of the Clinton Grocery company the T M Gobble company and Schall-Hutchinson company. Insurance covers about 80 per cent of the loss.

DEAD WOMAN IDENTIFIED; OFFICERS SEEKING SON

Muscatine Ia Nov 19 With the identification of the body in the deserted farm house west of this city yesterday, as that of Mrs Anna McDonough, of Oskaloosa, Ia., authorities are now seeking John McDonough, age 35, her son The woman and her son left Oskaloosa on October 28 for New Boston Ill., in a Ford car, and until the recovery of the woman's body relatives were at a loss to account for their disappearance

FARMHAND WAS VICIOUS IN ATTACK ON WOMEN

Council Bluffs, Ia., Nov 19 - Luther Coy aged 40, was placed in jail here in default of $1,000 bonds for alleged assault with intent to commit rape, the commitment being made by Justice R. Hammond, of Malvern.

Coy was formerly employed on the farm of Edward Shoemaker, in Mills county He was discharged and before leaving the place it is alleged he watched until Mrs Shoemaker had gone to Imogene, when he entered the house and terrorized Miss Bertha Shoeman, aged 17, and a younger sister It is charged that he attacked Miss Bertha with an axe when she fled with the baby and tried to reach a neighbor's house, but desisted when she pleaded for her life. Coy also broke in the door of a room where the children had taken refuge, using the ax. The younger sister managed to escape and hid in an upstairs room. Coy was caught at Imogene.

KINGSLEY BANKER SUED ON CHARGE OF ALIENATION

LeMars, Ia., Nov 19.—Schuyler Smith has started suit in the district court here against M. J Foft, a well known banker and land owner of Kingsley, and asks $25,000. Smith alleges Foft was intimate with his wife and broke up the Smith home.

Foft's wife secured a divorce at the last term of court.

LEMARS—Professor Willey, of Waterloo, has been appointed principal of the Union township consolidated school to succeed Professor Belknap.

CEDAR RAPIDS—That the women of his city are planning to take an active part in the city campaign next spring, when a mayor and four commissioners are to be elected is shown by the fact that the town is being listed carefully as to the opinion of each woman on the suffrage question. While the women can vote only on matters pertaining to taxation, it is agreed among local politicians that they can wield a powerful influence among the men voters in the home.

DES MOINES—Roy Gist, whose wife disappeared here a week ago, has discovered her at Iowa City and persuaded her to return with him She says a sister persuaded her to stay away

BUSINESS DISTRICT OF FORT DODGE HIT BY HEAVY FIRE LOSS

Damage Estimated at $350,000 With About 50 Per Cent Insurance Protection.

Fort Dodge, Ia., Nov. 18.—Fire completely gutted the four-story building occupied by the Prusia Hardware company last night. The blaze also spread to the building west and caused a total loss of $350,000 in the heart of the business district.

The cause of the fire is unknown. Employes of the hardware company scented smoke during the afternoon but could not trace it.

The Prusias building was valued at $125,000 and the stock at $140,000. Half of the loss is covered by insurance. The P. J. Collins Wall Paper and Paint company suffered $15,000 loss, half insured. The loss to the Crosby building, adjoining Prusias' and to the Rudisell shoe store from water has not been estimated.

Firemen worked all night quelling the blaze.

The hardware company had much ammunition in stock and the exploding cartridges menaced spectators and fire fighters.

ALLEGED WOMAN GRAFTER WANTED IN TWO CITIES

Mason City, Ia., Nov. 18.—Mrs. Adam Mohr seems to take as naturally to jails and penitentiaries as a duck to water. Whether she has a fondness for those penal institutions or cannot resist the temptation to fleece someone is not known. She was released from jail in this county only three weeks ago, giving a bond signed by a Cerro Gordo county farmer for appearance in court. According to the evidence in possession of County Attorney Hill she has served a term in the state penitentiary, and is wanted elsewhere. Muscatine officials picked her up shortly after her release on bonds here. It is claimed that Rev. L. E. Kettlekamp, pastor of the German Methodist Episcopal church there, found that he was roped in on a $125 deal.

Mrs. Mohr's trial is set for the district court of this county on Thursday. The bondsman is wondering if he can be held for the bond providing Muscatine decides to hold the woman.

In this city she fleeced the chief of police and his fatherinlaw out of several hundred dollars but some of it, given in the form of notes, was returned. Officers here state that the woman is "as bright as a silver dollar" and that she is skilled in fraud operations

BOYS FURNISH EVIDENCE ON SALE OF CIGARETS

Des Moines Ia., Nov. 18.—For the last six months club women of Des Moines have been sleuthing for evidence against the sale of cigarets to minors. They have now secured sufficient evidence to start prosecutions.

The women assert that in addition to many cigar dealers being open violators of the law against selling to minors, they have also refused to pay their mulch tax in many cases.

Six months ago the women started the campaign by obtaining the cooperation of the superintendents of the county and city schools and several city officials. They secured the indorsement of the women's clubs and organized a general committee made up from representatives of these clubs. Unknown to the public this committee has been meeting once in two weeks. The place of meeting and proceedings were guarded with great secrecy. Many school boys who bought cigarets have furnished evidence to the women

GOVERNOR DOES NOT INTEND TO CALL SPECIAL ELECTION

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 18.—Governor Clarke yesterday said that statements made at the recent suffrage convention in Des Moines that he will call a special election for June 5, 1916, for a vote on the equal suffrage amendment, were unauthorized.

"The legislature directed that the amendment be voted on June 5, 1916, at the state primary, therefore, there is no occasion for calling a special election," said the governor. "I saw the notice in the papers that someone said I intended to call a special election, and I wondered what it meant. No one ever consulted me on the matter and I had not given it any thought."

GIRL AWARDED $3,500 IN HEART BALM ACTION

Ackley, Ia., Nov. 18.—Three cases occupied the attention of the Hardin court for an entire week. The one case of more prominence than the others was that of Miss Jessie Crane against John Brandt. Both are residents of the village of Hubbard, in the south part of the county.

Miss Crane brought suit for $10,000 against Brand on the charge that he had failed to keep his promise to marry her. It was a case in which the friends of each were greatly interested, and a crowd of curious spectators filled the court room at each day's proceedings.

The jury took the case under advisement for six hours, then returned a verdict in favor of Miss Crane, the plaintiff, in the sum of $3,500.

FOLLOWS WIFE'S SISTER AND CAUSES HER ARREST

Ottumwa, Ia., Nov. 18.—Charles Stanton of Collins, Ia., followed his sisterinlaw, Mae Osborn of Des Moines, to Ottumwa and furnished the local police with information that led to the arrest of the girl and W. F. Deming. The girl has been Deming's stenographer.

Mrs. Deming later came to Ottumwa and filed a charge of auditery against the prisoners. They waived to the grand jury.

ALLIES' WAR CHIEFS TO MEET IN LONDON

Energetic Action Expected to Result From Conference In Paris.

Paris, Nov 20 The next meeting of the allied war council will be held in London. It is likely the Russian and Italian governments will designate representatives to attend this council

The session of the war council in Paris this week was held at the foreign office and another presided over by President Poincare at the Elysee palace In addition to the several members of the French and British committees had long conferences apart

It is understood that an understanding has been arrived at in regard to various subjects and energetic action is expected to result

SALONIKI OFFERS SPRIGHTLY SCENE

Greek Port Where Allies Are Landing Overrun By Polyglot Populace of All Kinds and Races.

Saloniki Greece Nov 1 (By mail) – The very approach to Saloniki foreshadows the presence of war The long reach of the Gulf of Saloniki reveals a continuous procession of ships going and coming, and from their standards trail the most unexpected flags Rumanian Belgian, Dutch, Russian, Egyptian all engaged in some way in victualing the foreign troops concentrated on the doorstep of the Balkans

Huge trans-Atlantic liners, French and British laden with soldiers, glide toward the harbor whose entrance is guarded by a common tug, metamorphosed into a warship by armor and a gun or two. The warship at the gate of Greece's second port flies the French, not the Greek, flag Each entering vessel is hailed and while not visited, is requested to give an account of itself before it is permitted to pass the gateway in the steel net, whose presence across the narrows is marked by a line of floats

Steel Net Guards Harbor

Within the harbor, whose safety is secured by this net against submarines, the scene is even more animated Not since the last Balkan war have so many ships gathered before Saloniki Out in the roadsteads lie French and British warships and one Italian man o war To defend the interests of Greece, a tiny Greek destroyer hugs the shore, a pigmy among giants of war

If the harbor of Saloniki is a conglomeration of strange flags and of every class of ship it is as nothing in comparison with the quays No Port Said, nor Marseilles, ever knew so polyglot a babel or saw such a kaleidoscope of customs There were French, poilue in their sky blue uniforms, French Alpine chasseurs, tam o'shanters on the side of the head French colonial troops—Turcos and Senegalese, in baggy khaki bloomers and short gaiters—French marines with red pompoms in their round caps, French dragoons with horsetails in their helmets, French officers of every description French sailors and—commonest of all—dim red trousered French territorials Now and then appear columns of Greek artillery Again straggling lines of Greek infantry take the right of way

British Salute British

Bands of British Tommies also push their way down the crowded streets British officers, canes in hand sweep the sidewalks from side to side driving the countless itinerant vendors into the street French salute Greeks Greeks salute French But the British salute only the British

Cosmopolitan as are the inhabitants of Saloniki at any time, they are more than ever now increased as the population has by refugees from Serbia, Macedonia and Thrace Among the permanent inhabitants to judge from the streets Turks seem to predominate

Besides the Greeks the Jews and the Turks, the quays of Saloniki are picturesque also with bearded Levantines of nondescript nationality, that might have stepped from the Arabian knights.

When night falls the lights at the mastheads and in the port holes of the assembled ships spring out At the docks a huge French transport unloads its cargo of human beings The shouts of the men and the clank of cranes coming across the water without ceasing throughout the night

At midnight the cafes close The lights in the harbor go out one by one. Patrols of soldiers with bayonets set— French, Greek, British—march up and down the pitch black side streets in search of stragglers.

HEAVY GALES SWEEP THE ATLANTIC COAST

Unusual Storm Developments In East, Over Great Lakes and Ohio Valley.

Washington, D C Nov 19 —Heavy gales and rain whipped the Atlantic coast from Jacksonville to Eastport, Me., and similar conditions prevailed through the great lakes region and the Ohio valley during the night, in what the weather bureau officials described as "one of the most remarkable storm developments in many years." The two storms early today were heading toward each other Early reports from along the south Atlantic coast indicated that shipping had generally escaped the storm's fury.

DAKOTA BLUE SKY LAW IS ANNULLED

Decision Results From Action Attempted Against William and Harry Morley, of Sioux City.

Pierre, S D., Nov 19 —The South Dakota "blue sky" law, as reenacted last winter, was a draft prepared by the attorney generals of Indiana, Michigan and South Dakota, and was designed to cure weakness shown in the "blue sky" laws of other states. The Kansas law is practically like the South Dakota law and was upheld by the courts.

Sioux Falls, S D., Nov 20 —An opinion was filed in federal court here this morning holding the South Dakota "blue sky" law as unconstitutional. The hearing was held here yesterday before United States Judges Elliott, of South Dakota, Munger, of Nebraska, and Sanborn, of Minnesota. At the conclusion of the hearing it was announced that the issues would be taken under advisement, and the interested attorneys did not expect a decision to be made for several days.

The attack on the constitutionality of the South Dakota law was made by William and Harry Morley, of Sioux City who had been charged with a violation of the measure in selling stock of the Sioux Falls Stock Yards company without obtaining permission from the State Securities commission.

From the first it was the contention of the Morleys that they were not violating any valid regulations, and the decision of the federal judges upholds their claim unless a higher tribunal makes a contrary ruling

In South Dakota, as in other states, difficulty has been encountered in framing a statute that will "hold water" in the matter of restricting sales of stocks and bonds. The first enactment on this subject in Iowa was knocked out by the court, but a new measure has been substituted, which the Iowa officials think will overcome the constitutional troubles.

As the question never has been submitted to the United States supreme court the South Dakota officials are inclined to promote a test case before the higher tribunal, and it is probable that an appeal will be launched at an early date

Under the holding that the "blue sky" law is void, a question probably will be raised on the validity of payments made to the special officers assigned to the administration of the measure. After the court annulment of the Iowa regulation the entire office was dissolved at once.

It has been claimed by the Morleys that the attempt to prosecute them was largely in the nature of persecution, inspired by jealous interests within the state. They insist that their business transactions have been entirely regular and legal They also allege that the record shows that the South Dakota securities commission gave their approval to local projects, which were unsound, while attempting to impose restrictions against sound business projects, merely because the promoter may have been an "outsider."

The Morleys, father and son, have been in trouble in Sioux City courts for several reasons. An indictment charging them with using the mails to defraud was returned by the last United States district court grand jury when it reported its findings to Judge Henry T. Reed. The indictment was secret. Shortly after it was returned the Morleys surrendered to federal authorities and put up a bond.

Settle For $2,000.

Both Morleys were deposed as officers of the machinery company which they organized in this city. They asked $40,000 as their share in the company when they were asked to resign. They finally settled for $2,000, records show.

ANTHRAX CONTRACTED FROM FURS IS FATAL

New York, Nov. 19.—Miss Sophia Rosen, 17 years old, the third antrax victim in this city within the last few months, died here today. The girl is believed to have contracted the disease which is common among animals by wearing a fur neckpiece, the skin of which had not been properly treated.

Plan to Enlist China As Ally to Foil Japs' Plans

France, Great Britain and Russia, Fearing They Will Lose Grip Upon Far East, Propose to Have Celestial Nation Become Member of Entente—Tokio Is Silent.

Washington, Nov 20.—Great Britain, France and Russia have united in an effort to add China to the entente alliance in order to prevent possible friction in the future between Japan and China and to preserve the peace of the far east. If China agrees to the plan, military participation in the present war is not expected.

Negotiations thus are in a conversation stage at Peking with no indications as to China's attitude. Although the United States is being informed its diplomatic representatives at Peking and European capitals are refraining from participation

Japan's Course Unknown.

This sensational turn in far eastern affairs on the eve of the proposed change by China from a republic to a monarchy has been the subject of confidential exchanges between the allied powers during the last week, but only became known here today Japan so far as is known, has not yet been consulted.

If Japan knows of the plans unofficially there is nothing here to indicate what her position will be.

Although Great Britain, France and Russia joined Japan in representations to China to postpone the establishment of a monarchy because it was thought a change during the present disturbed condition of affairs might provoke revolution and international complications this latest step by the allies is understood here not to have been initiated because of the monarchical situation alone. It was considered essential by the allies that such arrangements be made in the far east as would permanently safeguard their interests.

The impending change in China's form of government has rendered the situation somewhat acute. Fear of revolution in China and the possibility of Japanese interference to preserve peace have been impressed upon Japanese people to an extent that has attracted wide attention among the European diplomats.

Keep Japan's Hands Off.

By joining the entente allies none of China's operations could affect the course of the war in Europe, but the movement would effectually guarantee Japanese abstinence from interference with China. Japan's attitude is not clear as yet, but two possibilities are considered here as plausible:

First—That Japan will join in the movement on the theory that her paramount interests in China will not suffer any abridgement through the future action of the allies, or

Second—That Japan will remain aloof from any agreement, viewing even the future entrance of China as an ally as not altering Japan's right to independent action in the far east wherever here interests are affected.

The origin of the move to enlist China on the side of the allies is not known here, but there are indications that some Chinese diplomats are inclined very favorably toward it as insuring the integrity of China beyond question and stabilizing the national government.

None of the communications that have passed on the situation indicate that the allies have any hope that President Yuan Shi Kai will abandon his plan to establish a monarchy.

ANCONA'S VICTIMS JEERED, IS CLAIM

Italian Official Investigation Confirms Report Submarine Gave Liner No Warning.

Naples, Nov. 19, (delayed in transmission) —The official report of the investigation into the sinking of the Italian steamer Ancona by a submarine off the Tunisian coast, it as announcedw, was sent to Thomas Nelson Page, the United States ambassador at Rome, last night. The investigation reached the conclusion that the submarine fired a shell against the wireless apparatus on the Ancona without any warning.

The captain brought the vessel immediately to a halt. The submarine having hoisted the Austrian flag, the investigators found, the Ancona was about to hoist the Italian ensign, but the flag reached only half way up the mast when the submarine launched a torpedo which struck the steamer amidships. The captain of the Ancona, the official account says, ordered the life boats lowered, but while this was being done, the submarine continued firing against the steamer's boats. Some of the boats were pierced by shots, obliging the survivors to use their clothes to stop up the holes. In the meanwhile, it is alleged, those on board the submarine jeered their victims.

ILLINOIS LEGISLATURE CALLED BY GOVERNOR

Springfield, Ill., Nov. 19.—A call for an extraordinary session of the Illinois legislature to meet Monday, November 22, was issued today by Governor Dunne. Among subjects the legislature will consider are:

Amendment of the primary election law; amendment of the act relating to the governor's veto power; provision for ordinary and contingent expenses made necessary by a recent decision of the state supreme court and the salaries of the state officers.

RUMANIA IS NEAR DECISION ON WAR

Situation, Externally and Internally, Getting So Hot Balkan Kingdom Soon Must Get In.

Rome, (via Paris), Nov. 20.—A Bucharest dispatch to the Giornale D'Italia says:

"On account of dissensions which are beginning to arise in the liberal party of Rumania and the unyielding opposition of Take Jonescu, former minister of the interior, and M. Filipesco, former minister of war; Premier Bratiano has deemed it necessary to summon before King Ferdinand certain senators, deputies and others among the most important personalities of the party. To these persons confidential statements concerning the Rumanian policy are being given.

"The question of Rumanian neutrality seems about to enter a decisive phase. The rapidity with which events are moving in Serbia is hastening a decision in this regard, particularly as both Russia and Austria are concentrating troops near the northern boundary of Rumania."

CHECK UP EVIDENCE IN CHARGE AGAINST CONSUL

Washington, D. C., Nov. 19.—The department of justice today is making further inquiry into the activities of Austrian Consul General Von Nuber and his associates. An announcement said information had been received which would probably lead to further indictments for passport frauds. The investigation is the outcome of a conference in New York on Wednesday between A. Bruce Bielaski, chief of the bureau of investigation of the department of justice and Dr. Goricar

Experiments have shown that increased efficiency is obtained from coal which has been pulverized and shot into the furnaces under pressure.

GERMANY HAS PLENTY OF COTTON IS CLAIM

Enough Raw Material to Last For Years, Overseas News Agency Says.

Berlin, Nov. 20, (by wireless to Sayville).—Germany not only has all the cotton she needs for military purposes for several years, but new fields of supply are now open to her, says the Overseas news agency today. Prevention of cotton shipments to Switzerland, on the contention that the material would find its way to Germany and be used for making explosives, will hurt the neutral nation, but will not injure Germany, it declares, in commenting on Swiss reports that the entente powers have stopped cotton shipments for Swiss mills.

"Competent German authorities state that the German army is sufficiently provided with cotton for several years," the news agency says. "In addition, huge quantities can be obtained from Turkey by way of the Danube and even if all shipments were stopped Germany is provided with the material for an indefinite time."

SUBMARINE SINKS BRITISH GUNBOATS

Two Warships Sent to Bottom of Mediterranean and Third Put Out of Fight By Germans.

Berlin, (via London), Nov. 19.—Two British gunboats have been sunk in the Mediterranean off the Egyptian coast by a German submarine. Official announcement to this effect was made by the admiralty today.

A British auxiliary cruiser also was put out of action. The statement follows:

"A submarine on November 6, in Sollum harbord destroyed by gun fire two Anglo-Egyptian gunboats, the Prince Abbas and the Abdul Menem, each of which was armed with two guns. The same submarine silenced with its fire an armed British merchant steamer and captured its gun."

"One of our submarines on November 5, on the north African coast, sunk by torpedo the British auxiliary cruiser Para."

MAY ASK EMBARGO ON BUILDING STEEL

Congress May Be Requested to Enact Law to Enable Contractors to Build New Battleships.

Washington, Nov. 20.—Congress may be asked to place a temporary embargo on exports of structural steel to the European belligerents in order to afford a sufficient supply of the metal for use in the construction of the two battleships, bids for which were opened at the navy department on Wednesday.

This plan is suggested as a result of the disclosure that neither of the new battleships can be laid down before next summer because of a lack of steel. The entire output of the American steel plants, it is said, has been taken by the warring nations.

NEW BATTLE CRAFT TO BE VERY SPEEDY

Navy Plans Warships to Make 35 Knots an Hour and Carrying 16-Inch Guns.

Washington, Nov. 19. — Tentative plans are being considered, Secretary Daniels said, for two 26,000-ton battleships to be included in the first year's part of the five-year building program congress will be asked to approve. There are no warships so large afloat anywhere in the world now.

Part of the increased displacement in the newest ships will be due to changed hull construction to provide additional torpedo defense bulkheads.

The navy has developed a 16-inch rifle, of which no use has yet been made, and the new ships may carry 10 or more of them if developments of the European war indicate the advisability of mounting them.

Maximum speed of American battleships now built or authorized is less than 21 knots, although European first line ships go considerably above that. It is considered probable that a speed of perhaps 35 knots will be sought hereafter.

CAMBRIA ACQUIRES RIVAL STEEL PLANT

Announcement Made By W. H. Donner—Plans Not Matured, He Says.

Philadelphia, Nov. 19.—Wm. H. Donner, president of the Cambria Steel company, last night announced that he had concluded a deal for the purchase of the New York State Steel company, located at Buffalo, N. Y. The price paid for the property, which was placed in the hands of receivers on April 3, 1913, and later sold to a bondholders' committee, was not disclosed.

Mr. Donner stated that he had not determined what would be done with the property, but that the question would be settled in a few days.

Why Pay the Peddler or Canvasser Twice These Prices?

You can save a good deal of money by buying your stock tonic at this store, instead of paying the peddler big, fancy prices for goods of unknown quality. Look at these prices for that old reliable and guaranteed stock conditioner and worm expeller.

Dr. Hess Stock Tonic
25-lb. pail costs $1.60
100-lb. sack costs $5.00

Why pay the peddler twice these prices? Dr. Hess Stock Tonic is highly concentrated and will go as far as any preparation, no matter what price you pay. Dr. Hess & Clark, of Ashland, Ohio, manufacturers of the famous Dr. Hess line, do not have to pay for expense of horse, wagon and peddler: that's the reason they can sell their products to you through this store at rock-bottom prices. You can get your money back right here if any Dr. Hess preparations doesn't do what is claimed for it.

DRINK MORE WATER IF KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat less meat and take Salts for Backache or Bladder trouble—Neutralizes acids.

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a real sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

THE GLOVED HAND

A Detective Story

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

Author of "The Holladay Case," "The Marathon Mystery," "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet," etc.

"It is absurd," I assented, "and yet it isn't much more absurd than to suppose that two men would go out on the roof every night to watch a Roman candle, as you call it, come down. Unless, of course, they're lunatics."

"No," said Godfrey, "I don't believe they're lunatics—at least, not both of them. I have a sort of theory about it; but it's a pretty thin one, and I want you to do a little investigating on your own account before I tell you what it is. It's time we went to bed. Don't get up in the morning till you're ready to. Probably I'll not see you till night; I have some work to do that will take me off early. But Mrs. Hargis will make you comfortable, and I'll be back in time to join you in another look at the Roman candle!"

He uttered the last words jestingly, but I could see that the jest was a surface one, and that, at heart, he was deeply serious. Evidently, the strange star had impressed him even more than it had me—though, perhaps, in a different manner.

I found that it had impressed me deeply enough, for I dreamed about it that night—dreamed and awoke, only to fall asleep and dream and wake again. I do not remember that I saw any more in the dream than I had seen with my waking eyes, but each time I awoke trembling with apprehension and bathed in perspiration. As I lay there the second time, staring up into the darkness and telling myself I was a fool, there came a sudden rush of wind among the trees outside; then a vivid flash of lightning and an instant rending crash of thunder, and then a steady downpour of rain. I could guess how the gasping city welcomed it, and I lay for a long time listening to it, as it dripped from the leaves and beat against the house. A delightful coolness filled the room, an odor fresh and clean, and when, at last, with nerves quieted, I fell asleep again, it was not to awaken until the sun was bright against my curtains.

CHAPTER III.

THE DRAMA IN THE GARDEN.

I glanced at my watch, as soon as I was out of bed, and saw that it was after 10 o'clock. All the sleep I had lost during the hot nights of the previous week had been crowded into the last nine hours. I felt like a new man, and when, half an hour later, I ran downstairs, it was with such an appetite for breakfast as I had not known for a long time.

There was no one in the hall, and I stepped out through the open door to the porch beyond, and stood looking about me. The house was built in the midst of a grove of beautiful old trees, some distance back from the road, of which I could catch only a glimpse. It was a small house, a story and a half in height, evidently designed only as a summer residence.

"Good morning, sir," said a voice behind me, and I turned to find a pleasant faced gray haired woman standing in the doorway.

"Good morning," I responded. "I suppose you are Mrs Hargis?"

"Yes, sir, and your breakfast's ready."

"Has Mr Godfrey gone?"

"Yes, sir, he left about an hour ago. He was afraid his machine would waken you"

"It didn't" I said, as I followed her back along the hall "Nothing short of an earthquake would have wakened me. Ah, this is fine!"

She had shown me into a pleasant room, where a little table was set near an open window It made quite a picture with its white cloth and shining dishes and plate of yellow butter, and bowl of crimson berries, and—but I didn't linger to admire it. I don't know when I have enjoyed breakfast so much. Mrs. Hargis, after bringing in the eggs and bacon and setting a little pot of steaming coffee at my elbow, sensibly left me alone to the enjoyment of it. Ever since that morning, I have realized that, to start the day exactly right, a man should breakfast by himself, amid just such surroundings, leisurely and without distraction. A copy of the morning's Record was lying on the table, but I did not even open it I did not care what had happened in the world the day before!

At last, ineffably content, I stepped out upon the driveway at the side of the house, and strolled away among the trees. At the end of a few minutes, I came to the high stone wall which bounded the estate of the mysterious Worthington Vaughan, and suddenly the wish came to me to see what lay behind it. Without much difficulty, I found the tree with the ladder against it, which we had mounted the night before. It was a long ladder, even in the daytime, but at last I reached the top and settled myself on the limb against which it rested Assuring myself that the leaves hid me from any chance observer I looked down into the grounds beyond the wall

There was not much to see. The grounds were extensive and had evidently been laid out with care but there was an air of neglect about them, as though the attention they received was careless and inadequate The shrubbery was too dense, grass was invading the walks here and there a tree showed a dead limb or a broken one. Near the house was a wide lawn, designed, perhaps, as a tennis court or croquet ground, with rustic seats under the trees at the edge.

About the house itself was a screen of magnificent elms, which doubtless gave the place its name, and which shut the house in completely All I could see of it was one corner of the roof. This, however, stood out clear against the sky, and it was here, evidently, that the mysterious midnight figures had been stationed As I looked at it, I realized the truth of Godfrey's remark that probably from no other point of vantage but just this would be visible

It did not take me many minutes to exhaust the interest of this empty prospect, more especially since my perch was anything but comfortable, and I was about to descend when two white robed figures appeared at the edge of the open space near the house and walked slowly across it. I settled back into my place with a tightening of interest which made me forget its discomfort, for that these were the two sta worshipers I did not doubt

The distance was so great that their faces were the merest blurs but I could see that one leaned heavily upon the arm of the other, as much as to say, I see. To me for me hysterical support I could see hair of the feebler man was white, while that of his companion was jet black. The younger man's face appeared so dark that I suspected he wore a beard, and his figure was erect and vigorous, in the prime of life, virile and full of power.

He certainly dominated the older man. I watched them attentively, as they paced back and forth, and the dependence of the one upon the other was very manifest. Both heads were bent as though in earnest talk and, for perhaps half an hour, they walked slowly up and down. Then, at a sign of fatigue from the older figure, the other led him to a garden bench, where both sat down.

The elder man, I told myself, was no doubt Worthington Vaughan. Small wonder he was considered queer if he dressed habitually in a white robe and worshiped the stars at midnight! There was something monkish about the habits which he and his companion wore, and the thought flashed into my mind that perhaps they were members of some religious order, or some Oriental cult or priesthood. And both of them, I added to myself, must be a little mad!

As I watched, the discussion gradually grew more animated, and the younger man, springing to his feet, paced excitedly up and down, touching his forehead with his fingers from time to time, and raising his hands to heaven, as though calling it as a witness to his words. At last the other made a sign of assent, got to his feet, bent his head reverently as to a spiritual superior and walked slowly away toward the house. The younger man stood gazing after him until he passed from sight, then resumed his rapid pacing up and down, evidently deeply moved.

At last, from the direction of the house, came the flutter of a white robe. For a moment, I thought it was the old man returning, then, as it emerged fully from the trees, I saw that it was a woman—a young woman, I guessed, from her slimness, and from the mass of dark hair which framed her face. And then I remembered that Godfrey had told me that Worthington Vaughan had a daughter.

The man was at her side in an instant, held out his hand, and said something, which caused her to shrink away. She half turned, as though to flee, but the other laid his hand upon her arm speaking earnestly, and, after a moment, she permitted him to lead her to a seat. He remained standing before her, sometimes raising his hands to heaven, sometimes pointing toward the house, sometimes bending close above her, and from time to time, making that peculiar gesture of touching his fingers to his forehead, whose meaning I could not guess. But I could guess at the torrent of passionate words which poured from his lips, and at the eager light which was in his eyes!

The woman sat quite still, with bowed head, listening, but making no sign either of consent or refusal. Gradually, the man grew more confident, and at last stooped to take her hand, but she drew it quickly away, and, raising her head, said something slowly and with emphasis. He shook his head savagely, then, after a rapid turn up and down seemed to agree, bowed low to her, and went rapidly away toward the house. The woman sat for some time where he had left her, her face in her hands; then, with a gesture of weariness and discouragement, crossed the lawn and disappeared among the trees.

For a long time I sat there motionless, my eyes on the spot where she had disappeared, trying to understand. What was the meaning of the scene? What was it the younger man had urged so passionately upon her, but at which she had rebelled? What was it for which he had pled so earnestly? The obvious answer was that he pled for her love, that he had urged her to become his wife but the answer did not satisfy me. His attitude had been passionate enough, but it had scarcely been lover like. It had more of admonition, of warning, even of threat, than of entreaty in it. It was not the attitude of a lover to his mistress, but of a master to his pupil.

And what had been the answer, wrung from her finally by his insistence—the answer to which he had at first violently dissented, and then reluctantly agreed?

No doubt, if these people had been garbed in the clothes of every day, I should have felt at the outset that all this was none of my business, and have crept down the ladder and gone away. But their strange dress gave to the scene an air at once unreal and theatrical, and not for an instant had I felt myself an intruder. It was as though I were looking at the rehearsal of a drama designed for the public gaze and enacted upon a stage, or, more properly, a pantomime, dim and figurative, but most impressive. Might it not, indeed, be a rehearsal of some sort—private theatricals—make believe? But that scene at midnight—that could not be make believe! No, nor was this scene in the garden It was in earnest—in deadliest earnest, there was about it something sinister and threatening; and it was the realization of this—the realization that there was something here not right, something demanding scrutiny—which kept me chained to my uncomfortable perch, minute after minute.

But nothing further happened, and I realized at last, that if I was to escape an agonizing cramp in the leg, I must get down I put my feet on the ladder, and then paused for a last look about the grounds My eye was caught by a flutter of white among the trees. Someone was walking along one of the paths, in a moment, straining forward, I saw it was the woman, and that she was approaching the wall.

And then, as she came nearer, I saw that she was not a woman at all, but a girl—a girl of 18 or 20, to whom the flowing robes gave, at a distance, the effect of age. I caught only a glimpse of her face before it was hidden by a clump of shrubbery, but that glimpse told me that it was a face to set the pulses leaping I strained still farther forward, waiting until she should come into sight again. . . .

Along the path she came, with the sunlight about her, kissing her hair, her lips, her cheeks—and the next instant her eyes were staring upwards into mine

I could not move. I could only stare down at her I saw the hot color sweep across her face, I saw her hand go to her bosom; I saw her turn to flee. Then to my amazement, she stopped, as though arrested by a sudden thought, turned toward me again, and raised her eyes deliberately to mine.

For [illegible] minute she stood there, her gaze searching and intent, as though she would read my soul; then her face hardened with sudden resolution. Again she put her hand to her bosom, turned hastily toward the wall, and disappeared behind it.

The next instant, something white came flying over it, and fell on the grass beneath my tree. Staring down at it, I saw it was a letter.

CHAPTER IV.

ENTER FREDDIE SWAIN.

I fell, rather than climbed, down the ladder, snatched the white missile from the grass, and saw that it was, indeed a sealed and addressed envelope. I had somehow expected that address to include either Godfrey's name or mine; but it did neither. The envelope bore these words:

MR. FREDERIC SWAIN,
1010 Fifth Avenue,
New York City.

If not at this address,
please try the Calumet club.

I sat down on the lowest rung of the ladder, whistling softly to myself For Freddie Swain's address was no longer 1010 Fifth avenue, nor was he to be found in the luxurious rooms of the Calumet club. In fact, it was nearly a year since he had entered either place. For some eight hours of every week day, he labored in the law offices of Royce & Lester, he slept in a little room on the top floor of the Marathon; three hours of every evening, Saturday, Sundays and holidays excepted, were spent at the law school of the University of New York, and the remaining hours of the 24 in haunts much less conspicuous and expensive than the Calumet club.

For Freddie Swain had taken one of these toboggan slides down the hill of fortune which sometimes happen to the most deserving His father, old Gen. Orlando Swain, had, all his life, put up a pompous front and was supposed to have inherited a fortune from somewhere, but, when he died, this edifice was found to be all facade and no foundation, and Freddie inherited nothing but debts. He had been expensively educated for a career as an ornament of society, but he found that career cut short, for society suddenly ceased to find him ornamental. I suppose there were too many marriageable daughters about'

I am bound to say that he took the blow well. Instead of attempting to cling to the skirts of society as a vender of champagne or an organizer of fetes champetres, he—to use his own words—decided to cut the whole show.

Our firm had been named as the administrators of the Swain estate, and when the storm was over and we were sitting among the ruins, Freddie expressed the intention of going to work.

"What will you do?" Mr Royce inquired. "Ever had any training in making money?"

"No, only in spending it," retorted Freddie, easily. "But I can learn. I was thinking of studying law. That's a good trade, isn't it?"

"Splendid!" assented Mr. Royce, warmly. "And there are always so many openings. You see, nobody studies law—lawyers are as scarce as hen's teeth."

"Just the same, I think I'll have a try at it," said Freddie, sturdily 'There's always room at the top, you know," he added, with a grin "I can go to the night school at the university, and I ought to be able to earn enough to live on, as a clerk or something I know how to read and write."

"That will help, of course," agreed Mr. Royce. "But I'm afraid that, right at first, anyway, you can scarcely hope to live in the style to which you have been accustomed"

Freddie turned on him with fire in his eyes.

"Look here," he said, "suppose you give me a job. I'll do my work and earn my wages—try me and see."

There was something in his face that touched me, and I glanced at Mr Royce. I saw that his gruffness was merely a mantle to cloak his real feelings; and the result was that Freddie Swain was set to work as a copying clerk at a salary of $15 a week. He applied himself to his work with an energy that surprised me, and I learned that he was taking the night course at the university, as he had planned Finally, one night, I met him as I was turning in to my rooms at the Marathon, and found that he had rented a cubby-hole on the top floor of the building. After that, I saw him occasionally, and when six months had passed, was forced to acknowledge that he was thoroughly in earnest. I happened to remark to Mr. Royce one day that Swain seemed to be making good.

"Yes," my partner agreed, "I didn't think he had it in him. He had a rude awakening from his dream of affluence, and it seems to have done him good."

But, somehow, I had fancied that it was from more than a dream of affluence he had been awakened, and now, as I sat staring at this letter, I began to understand dimly what the other dream had been.

The first thing was to get the letter into his hands, for I was certain that it was a cry for help. I glanced at my watch and saw that it was nearly half past 12. Swain, I knew, would be at lunch, and was not due at the office until 1 o'clock. Slipping the letter into my pocket, I turned back to the house, and found Mrs. Hargis standing on the front porch.

Paris Safe But Sober.

From Century Magazine

"Paris is safe now, and, like an invalid just out of danger, is able to sit up and see a few friends. The Folies Bergeres! How like old times' Surely you won't be able to help laughing there! In that slim and preoccupied audience there is a dry laugh or two occasionally, but mostly they dream at the ceiling Comedy scenes go for pathos, and pathos—men rise, yawn, and walk out. Is this a dress rehearsal, college boys' theatricals, or what? The house drifts further and further away until suddenly—'La Marseillaise!' and the crowd is on its feet, electrified, joining in the chorus, shouting 'Vive la France!' With the waving tricolor for a spur the show picks up for a while until a shoudder runs through the spectators—oh, that fancy bayonet drill by the chorus! And now the women leave; their faces are a little white.

"No, the city has little appetite for gaiety; it is gripping realities. A myriad poignant needs keep Paris busy. And as the trained nurse in the operating room does not laugh or ask questions, but silently passes the instruments, so anxious, obedient Paris is straining every nerve to assist the surgeon, and has no thought for anything but war. And, stimulated by its great peril, that thought has been so concentrated by suffering, by sacrifice, and service, that Paris has been lifted into a new order of being. It has gone on, it has gone up."

HE ASCERTAINS CAUSE OF ABNORMAL BEINGS

From the New York Times.

Sea urchins, which were double headed, forms of his own raising, were shown the other day on the screen by Prof. A. J. Goldfarb, of the chair of biology of the College of the City of New York, before the New York Academy of Sciences, section of biology, in demonstrating his theory of the origin of certain abnormal forms.

He believes that as there are Siamese twins in the lower orders which can be produced under test conditions, so in the human species may be found strange types which had their origin in ways not hitherto explained.

The double sea urchins were produced by placing the eggs from which they sprang in chemical solutions, which permitted them to join closely. Professor Goldfarb presented in detail the results of his researches in the experimental grafting of organism. He does not share the common belief that the uncanny monsters are due to some mental cause, but takes the whole question of their origin into the domain of physiological chemistry.

Certain changes in the system, certain derangements of metabolism may bring into the world these beings which have excited the wonder and terror of men for ages. The being whose form had been ascribed to the anger of a god or to the curse of a witch becomes, in the light of the investigations of Professor Goldfarb merely the application of a formula of chemistry and biology.

The paper was regarded by those present as having an important bearing on one of the great mysteries of life. Dr. H. W. Schulte, who presided as temporary chairman, raised the question as to whether the Cohnheim theory of cancer might not have an important bearing on the theory advanced by Professor Goldfarb.

CLEVER WIDOWS AND SINGLE WOMEN.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

"Not one could tell, for nobody knew,
Why love was made to gladden a few
And hearts that would forever be true,
Go lone and starved the whole way through."

I am nonplussed at the avalanche of letters which has poured in upon me this past week, making the query, in one ingenious way or another, "Are widows more fascinating to men than their single sisters? If so, why so? What is their secret of power over male hearts?" etc.

These correspondents have placed a rather hard conundrum before me to solve, but I'll do my best to try to unravel the mystery. The woman who has gone through the experience of happy courtship and marriage has gone from her A, B, C's, to graduation in her knowledge of men's hearts and the general principle of making herself agreeable to the opposite sex. She knows men of the world are worldly; they admire saints, but at a great distance. Therefore the widow who is not averse to trying matrimony a second time is not a prude, but rather a jolly companion, who has it down to a science just how far to encourage sentiment, always adroitly turning a man's thoughts to matrimony, never to frivolity

No matter how sad the widow's heart may be, she trains her lips to wear a smile, she knows men enjoy a hearty laugh with a woman, but will flee from a tale of woe. She is past mistress in the delicate art of the right kind of courtship, the kind that awakens what is noblest, truest and best in man's nature.

First, she simply impresses the man she would win with her modesty, gentleness, sympathy and earnestness. Her intuition tells her the kind of a man whose heart is impressible and those who are free lances, and ever will be The widow's cleverness is evidenced by the fact that she will not encourage the calls of the man who would enjoy the warmth and coziness of her parlor the long winter through, but parrys all attempts to discover his attitude regarding marriage The widow is wise enough to classify friends in the category to which they belong, wasting neither hopes nor time upon them. When the friend calls for a pleasant evening, she treats him cordially, generally inviting some single woman acquaintance to enjoy his society also, providing she knows beforehand that he is coming.

If her admirer talks seriously, she gives him a fair chance to propose. She is so dignified, so womanly, understanding so thoroughly a man's moods, cheering him when he is lonely and dispirited, catching his happy spirit when he is gay, knowing how to soothe when he is restless, and cajole when he is stubborn—that her witchery grows upon him. By degrees he becomes dependent upon her for happiness.

Many a single woman lets a man take his own time to discover this state of his heart. The widow's creed is, waste as little time as possible. Generosity is a part of her nature.

If a man does not seem to admire her, and she thinks he would make a good husband for a woman whom he could admire, she is generous enough to introduce him to her women friends.

Single women are every whit as attractive to men as widows are. The rock ahead of many single women is in encouraging, as a lover, men who have not the remotest idea of ever taking unto themselves a wife. When such a man's ardor begins to cool, and he absents himself on the evenings he was wont to call—making all sorts of excuses to remain away, they ascribe it to business worry—anything, everything but the right cause. A widow would surmise he had found a new sweetheart and erase him from her slate without ado. Every woman, be she maid or widow, has the same kind of a loving heart in her bosom. The single woman grieves over a broken love dream. The widow allows no man to break her neatly mended heart.

The Greatest Sin of All.

From the Christian Herald

A New York preacher recently sent out a circular letter asking those who received it to mention what they believed to be the greatest sin, that is, the sin most universally indulged in. The vote went to selfishness.

This is the true miracle of Christianity; to take out selfishness and put in love; to take out the desire for one's own way and to instil the desire that God shall have his way and that he shall have it by helping us minister to others.

Ancestors.

If you could see your ancestors
All standing in a row,
Would you be proud of them or not,
Or don't you really know?
Some strange discoveries are made
In climbing family trees,
And some of them, you know, do not Particularly please.

If you could see your ancestors
All standing in a row,
There might be some of them, perhaps,
You wouldn't care to know.
But here's another question, which Requires a different view—
If you could meet your ancestors,
Would they be proud of you?

BATTLES LEAVE STRAIN ON FACES OF SOLDIERS

Berlin—Prof. Ludwig Schleich, one of Germany's prominent medical men, has just published a report of his observations after several months' work at the front and in military hospitals in various parts of Germany. He dwells particularly on the psychological effect of the strain of modern battle on the private soldier.

"There is frequently," he observes, "a strange, almost awful, look in the faces of those who have been in battle. They are still willing soldiers, some of them eager to get back to the trenches, but the more highly civilized a man is, the deeper his feelings, the more does he bear that indelible something in his face, the sign that he has seen terrible things.

Physically those soldiers may be hard as iron, says Professor Schleich, "but psychically they are not intact. The officers nearly always develop an uncanny, marble, staring look, as though they had grown accustomed to look unshudderingly at the terrors and desolating orgies of destruction, and finally felt that their eyes had become a mirror of the horrible. It is as though the claws of a demon had seized their faces and made their eyes sink deeper into their hollows. They are all changed, they have seen the head of the Gorgon in the region of night."

New Use For the Subsoil Plow.

From the Country Gentleman.

There has been endless discussion as to the profit of following the turning plow with the subsoiler. Evidence that the operation has paid well in some cases is incontestable. That it has not paid in other cases seems equally well established. If there is a hardpan under the surface soil, and the use of the subsoil plow breaks this up so as to give better drainage or to prevent erosion, subsoiling pays if done when the subsoil is dry. When these conditions are lacking the value of the practice is doubtful, to say the least.

The Tennessee experiment station has found a new use for the subsoil plow, and farmers who have tried it commend it highly. When land is too dry and hard to break with a turning plow one can often run deep furrows 12 to 18 inches apart with a subsoil plow, breaking up the ground but not turning it up in chunks. Then the disk harrow is put on it and the ground is worked down to a good seed bed. Many clods and much hard work may thus be avoided. This method is most useful in preparing for fall sown grains, since the ground is likely to be dry and hard to work at that season. Some farmers have practiced it with good results in the spring when preparing for corn. Of course it is only in special cases that one would care to use the subsoiler in this manner. When the land will plow well ordinary plowing will usually be preferred. When there is any large amount of vegetable matter on top of the ground the turning plow is needed to get it under. When motive power is lacking the use of the subsoil plow is not practical, since at least three good horses are needed to pull a subsoiler running a foot or more deep in hard land. Still, there are so many times when the plan can be followed to advantage that it may be expected to come into general use, in some sections at least.

Just Sunlight.

From the Milwaukee Journal.

"Never mind the weather while the wind doesn't blow," we used to hear. But it would be more to the point to say, "while the sun shines." We don't have cure alls any more; we've grown too wise, but plain sunshine comes as near to a cure-all as anything.

We have learned that sunlight is good for the affairs of large corporations, if not always for the directors. We know that it is good for eyesight, though we are just beginning to learn how often eye-strain causes fatigue and nervousness. We also value it for its habit of pointing out dusty places that would otherwise escape notice, and cobwebs. But we don't realize all that the sun does for us when it strikes the dust that no housewife can wholly keep away.

Sunlight, just plain sunlight, is one of the best germicides there is. It destroys the danger imminent in all dust. The wicked little microbe suffers from it even more than the wicked big trust. That is the real reason why it is more healthful to live in a sunlit house, even when you're never home while the sunlight is turned on You're in less danger of colds and any kind of infection that may be around. Your system doesn't have to fight against such odds.

Sunlight, when we can get it at all, is usually a question of our town preference. It's better to let the sun in than to hang your windows with the most expensive kind of curtain or draw the shade lest your brilliant new carpet should fade.

Another Victim of Higher Criticism.

From the Christian Herald.

Cadmus is a purely legendary character. The foundation of the city of Thebes is attributed to him. He was said to be the son of a Phoenician king. But it is believed that the name is a Hellenized form of a Phoenician word, Kedem, meaning "the east," and that it indicates that the Greeks derived their knowledge of letters from the east, i. e., from Phoenicia. Strictly speaking, no one man invented the alphabet, but it was gradually developed from hieroglyphic writing.

Confused Deities.

An Englishman was visiting an American family in which there was a young boy of eight years. The man was addressed by all members of the family as "My Lord." As the family were seated at the table the lord was served first of all. The dish was offered him with the remark "My Lord, will you have this?" "My Lord, do you care for this?" It happened that the pickle was overlooked and the nobleman reached for some. The small boy, seeing this, punched his mother and said in a loud whisper:

"Mother, mother, God wants the pickle."

"Can't do it, Miss Joan," said he stubbornly, but with an effort to subdue the wistful look in his old eyes. "Nothing would please me better. I'd love t' do it. But it ain't right, as Mr. King says. I got to go by what he says."

Eric assumed an air of severity. "Do you mean to say that the church has been meddling with your affairs?"

"Meddling?" gasped Jabez.

"Yes, sir, meddling."

"Go long with you, Eric," exclaimed Jabez helplessly. "Lies is lies."

"And Mr. King has put the hand of bigotry on your life?" in fine scorn.

"What's that?" demanded Jabez, bristling.

"Don't tease, Eric," interposed Joan.

"The church has a great deal to answer for," insisted Midthorne. "Meddling like this with a man's business."

"Business?" murmured Jabez. "Whose business?"

"Isn't it your business to make people happy?"

"Well, I guess it's Mr King's business, too," said he resignedly. "He comes down here and tells me the truth about things and I see things in a new way from what I used to. Old Presbrey stretched the truth so that it looked mighty fishy to me. Mr. King puts it in a nutshell. If he says it's wrong to lie, why it is, that's all. Dang it all," he exploded virtuously, "I never see a pirate in my life. Nor a handsome princess either." John Payson spoke, with a twinkle in his eyes. "Do you believe that everything in the bible is true, Uncle Jabe?"

Jabez glared at him. "I'll believe it all until some of you smart Alecks prove it ain't. I used to laugh at that tale about Jonar and the whale. Mr. King says it's paregorical. I told him nobody could make me believe a feller could live inside a whale's belly—bible er no bible. He said he didn't believe it either It's just a paryble."

"They are joking with you, Uncle Jabe," said Mary, coming to his rescue.

"Of course, we are," cried Eric warmly. "We will not ask you to tell us any more lies. Mr. King is right. But you surely can't object to telling us a few true stories."

Jabez Carr pondered "Well," he said at last and with conviction, "a story ain't wuth tellin' unless it's a lie." Then, to change the subject, which was more dangerous than he cared to admit "When do you start Eric?"

And so, instead of being entertained by him on this Sunday afternoon, they were content and eager to discuss their own intimate affairs for his especial benefit, thereby doing much toward the support of Mr King's missionary efforts and at the same time adding considerable to their own estimate of what heaven really is

Jabez succeeded in grasping a few of the more important details, a thousand trivial points escaped him. By dint of arduous questioning, he gathered that the ground was to be broken next week for the Bright mansion, that the plans for the great public library were well under way, that Jack and Mary were to live in New York City, that Eric and Joan were to make Corinth their home for a few years, at least, that the Widow Payson would not hear of Adam's removal to a sanitorium in the Adirondacks, that Mr. Presbrey and Mr King were boson friends, that the former was prayer leader in the reconstructed First Church, and very sure about it, that Mr Blagden was a greater man than ever before, that Mrs. Blagden was an angel, that Corinth would be put on the map to stay, that the world was a very wonderful abiding place, after all

One secret remained untold He was never to know that one of the tall young men who sat there glibly talking was his own grandson.

He walked with them to the gate when the dusk of night began to fall It had been a great afternoon for him, but a distressingly short one. Yes, they seemed to be growing shorter all the time He leaned on the bars and watched them until they were out of sight among the trees.

"Funny thing," he mused, "but I can't remembber being so keen about things when I was their age. Times must have changed a whole lot. Still, I wonder It was a long while ago. I guess a young feller is a young feller, no matter where you put him."

Then he went back clucking to the squirrels.

* * * * * * *

Adam Carr, propped up in his wheel chair, eyed a dark and threatening sky from the tiny lawn in front of the Widow Payson's house in Handy street. There was an alertness in his eyes that contrasted sharply with the inertness of his body, which sagged in the depths of the chair Late afternoon winds came gently up from the sea, bringing coolness to relieve the heat of this blistering day in May Passers-by bespoke him from the sidewalk, along which they hurried in advance of the approaching storm.

"Riding at anchor in a safe cove," said Adam to himself and of himself

Mrs. Payson came to the porch.

"I think we'd better have the nurse get you into the house, Adam," she said.

He looked wistfully at the sky "I'd like to have a good drenching," he said to her. "It can't hurt me."

"Nonsense." she said. "Don't be silly." She went into the house to call the nurse.

He grumbled. "A little rain won't spoil me. You'd think I was a lump of sugar instead of clay."

The nurse and Mrs. Payson lifted the chair to the tiny front porch.

"I'll stay out here, if you please," he said, "until it really begins to rain. I like the rush of the wind. Don't worry. I won't blow away. I'm anchored, safe enough."

They left him to wait for the sweep of the storm. Who can tell of the thoughts, the bitter conflict of thoughts, that ran through the keep, active brain of this wonderful man as he sat there glowering at a sky no blacker than his mood?

There was life in the wind that swept his grim, expressionless face; there was strength in the way it came up to smite him, to caress him, to tantalize him. He opened his mouth and drank it in, and held his breath as if to keep it captive. His eyes shone with the love of it, with the hatred of it. He loved it because it was life; he hated it because it was dead when it left his lungs to go oozing out into the world again. And he knew it would come to life the instant it left him. He hated a dead thing. He hated his own body. He loved the wind because it could live and die in the same breath, and live on forever.

He found himself wondering, at last, if there was a soul within him that lived and died, and went on living as the wind lived, without end through all time—always and forever. It was a strange thought to him. He liked it. What was the wind but the rush of countless souls that came and went with each succeeding breath? The wind would never die. It would cease one day to visit his useless hulk, but it would go on forever just the same, carrying the last breath of him with it—the last bit of the soul of him He liked the thought of it. There was something in it, after all Life went on with the wind, death stayed behind to rot. The wind would never die. Yes, that was what they meant when they said the soul could never die. How could it die?

In that short space of time, as the storm came up, Adam Carr began to grasp the elusive thing men call religion. He was not taking it on faith. He was beginning to reason it out.

The first scattering drops of rain blew across his face. Someone moved behind him. He looked up. The nurse was at the head of his chair, smiling.

"It's coming," she said

"Coming and going," he said, with a smile she did not understand, it was so mysterious.

Even as the door closed upon the gathering storm, a man hurried up from the sidewalk and lifted the knocker

Mrs. Payson admitted him. A tall, frail man whose hair was white.

"I've come, Adam, to see if we cannot be friends after all these bitter years," said Horace Blagden, stopping still at the foot of the chair.

Adam caught his breath. He was speechless for many seconds; long, tense seconds they were. When words came, it was the old Adam Carr who uttered them

"Horace," he said, slowly, deliberately, "it won't seem natural not to hate you."

"I understand," said Mr. Blagden. "It has not been easy for me, Adam."

Adam Carr addressed the wondering nurse.

"Miss Hastings, will you be good enough to take Mr. Blagden's hat and to push my chair over by the window? And then you may leave us for a while. I beg your pardon. This is Mr. Horace Blagden, the great man of Corinth."

Mr. Blagden did not wince. If there was a tinge of irony in the characterization, it escaped him. He bowed graciously to the young woman and seated himself where he could look into the face of the man who had just made the admission—the one man in all Corinth to begrudge him the distinction up to the present hour. Ah, it was something to get that out of Adam Carr' Now it was complete. His cup of satisfaction was full.

THE END.

Competition vs. Regulation.

From the Waco Morning News.

One of the largest out-of-state insurance companies doing business in Texas has been directed by the state insurance commission to show cause why its license to do business in Texas should not be revoked for alleged violation of the insurance laws by writing business below the rates prescribed by the commission. The company is charged with having issued a policy at a rate of 25 cents, whereas the rate fixed by the commission is 50 cents.

From St. Louis comes a news dispatch announcing that the Standard Oil had advanced the price of gasolene to St. Louis consumers 1 cent a gallon as a result of a protest to President Wilson and the federal trade commission by independent dealers. It appears that a few weeks ago the independents raised the price of gasolene one cent a gallon and the Standard Oil refused to make a similar advance, wherefore the complaint of unfair tactics. Immediately after the Standard advanced its price to the figure fixed by the independents, the latter made another advance of 1 cent a gallon, which the Standard has not yet met.

These two incidents may well cause those of us who have believed in the virtue of competition to ask "Where are we at?"

Here we have an insurance company threatened with prosecution for giving a customer cheaper insurance than a state commission says he should have, and an oil company put on the grill for not advancing the price of gasoline when a competitor advances his price.

Incidentally and quite apart from the question raised by these two incidents, we can not understand why St. Louis filling stations are selling gasoline at 11 cents a gallon while Waco stations are charging 14 cents.

If the state is to fix the price at which insurance companies sell protection against fire, why should not the state fix the price at which oil companies must sell gasoline? And if an insurance company is to be penalized for selling fire protection below the price charged by the competitors and an oil company called to account for not raising prices to meet advances of its competitors, why not repeal the law of supply and demand entirely?

We give it up.

Mr. Bryan's Unreal World.

From the Minneapolis Journal.

The trouble with Mr Bryan is the same as the trouble with many other dear people in this world. They have constructed an imaginary world all their own, with doves floating about, instead of peopled by aggressive folk ready to take advantage of a condition of helpless unpreparedness in others.

Miss Katherine Dahlgren, well known in New York and Philadelphia society, is to drive an auto in a race with a man on a motorcycle.

Owing to the inability to seure male labor, over 400 women school teachers in Glasgow, Scotland, have agreed to pick this year's raspberry crop.

Mrs. Manando McCabe, of Logansport, Ind., has been declared insane because she is under the hallucination that she is the "Queen of the Movies."

The spring of a new automobile clock is automatically wound by electricity.

Keep Going.

Is the goal distant, and troubled the road.
And the way long?
And heavy your load?
Then gird up your courage and say, "I am strong"
And keep going.

Is the work weary, and endless the grind
And petty the pay?
Then brace up your mind
And say, "Something better is coming my way,"
And keep going.
And keep doing.
Is the drink bitter life pours in your cup—
Is the taste gall?
Then smile and look up
And say, "God is with me whatever befall,"
And keep trusting.

Is the heart heavy with hope long deferred
And with prayers that seem vain?
Keep saying the word—
And that which you strive for you yet shall attain:
Keep praying.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox in October Nautilus.

All Very Tragic.

At the Players' club in New York the happy ending so essential to a play's financial success was being discussed, when Butler Glaenzer said:

"No play has a happy ending."

They looked at him through the cigarette smoke in amazement.

"No play has a happy ending," he repeated. "It runs on and on, and at last it ends tragically in some one-horse town, with the entire road company stranded and without the price of an oyster stew among the lot of them."

Quite Likely.

"I can't understand it," said the fair customer in the shoe store. "You say these are No 4's, and they pinch dreadfully. The pair I had before were threes, and they never gave me any trouble."

"Perhaps the threes were marked down," suggested the salesman.

Unversatile Nature.

Marie, the eight-year-old hopeful of a certain household, was seated at the breakfast table one morning. As usual, eggs were served.

Now, either Marie was not hungry or she had grown tired of the inevitable bill of fare, for very earnestly she lifted her eyes to heaven and exclaimed:

"I wish to goodness hens would lay something besides eggs!"

THE NEWEST REMEDY FOR BACKACHE, RHEUMATISM AND DROPSY

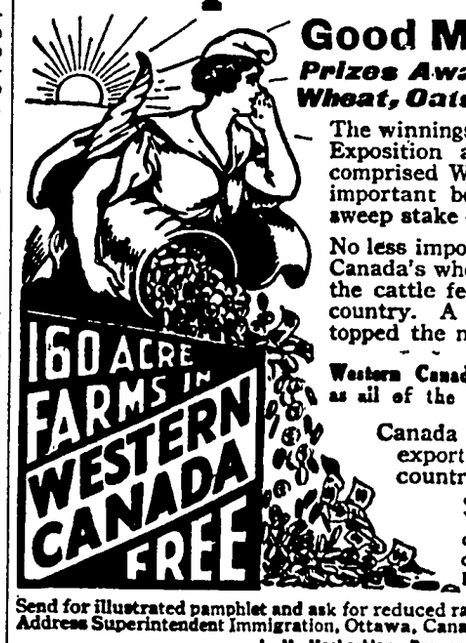
Kidney, Bladder and Uric Acid troubles bring misery to many. When the kidneys are weak or diseased, these natural filters do not cleanse the blood sufficiently, and the poisons are carried to all parts of the body. There follow depression, aches and pains, heaviness, drowsiness, irritability, headaches, chilliness and rheumatism. In some people there are sharp pains in the back and loins, distressing bladder disorders and sometimes obstinate dropsy. The uric acid sometimes forms into gravel or kidney stones. When the uric acid affects the muscles and joints it causes lumbago, rheumatism, gout or sciatica. This is the time to send Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., 10c for large trial package of "Anuric."

During digestion uric acid is absorbed into the system from meat eaten, and even from some vegetables. The poor kidneys get tired and backache begins. This is a good time to take "Anuric," the new discovery of Dr. Pierce for Kidney trouble and Backache. Neglected kidney trouble is responsible for many deaths, and Insurance Company examining doctors always test the water of an applicant before a policy will be issued. Have you ever set aside a bottle of water for twenty-four hours? A heavy sediment or settling sometimes indicates kidney trouble. If you wish to know your condition send a sample of your water to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., and describe symptoms. It will be examined without any expense to you, and Dr. Pierce or his medical staff will inform you truthfully. Anuric is now for sale by dealers, in 50c pck'gs.

Bumper Grain Crops

Good Markets—High Prices

Prizes Awarded to Western Canada for Wheat, Oats, Barley, Alfalfa and Grasses



The winnings of Western Canada at the Soil Products Exposition at Denver were easily made. The list comprised Wheat, Oats, Barley and Grasses, the most important being the prizes for Wheat and Oats and sweep stake on Alfalfa.

No less important than the splendid quality of Western Canada's wheat and other grains, is the excellence of the cattle fed and fattened on the grasses of that country. A recent shipment of cattle to Chicago topped the market in that city for quality and price.

Western Canada produced in 1915 one-third as much wheat as all of the United States, or over 300,000,000 bushels.

Canada in proportion to population has a greater exportable surplus of wheat this year than any country in the world, and at present prices you can figure out the revenue for the producer. In Western Canada you will find good markets, splendid schools, exceptional social conditions, perfect climate, and other great attractions. There is no war tax on land and no conscription.

What To Look For in Buying A Piano.

Remember a piano is first of all, a musical instrument, not merely a piece of furniture. It must have the musical qualities as well as beauty of design and finish. Decide first on Tone, Action and Durability--select design and finish afterward

WELTY PIANOS are built for lasting musical quality. Perfection of tone is the reason for every part, every bit of workmanship, every careful refinement in construction The very purity and strength of tone show superior quality. It does not take a trained musician to appreciate the tone of the Welty Piano. All music lovers recognize its beauty. The action transmits the touch of the fingers to the strings. It must respond accurately to every variation. To show sensitiveness of action, try getting a soft tone by a very light touch with the "loud" pedal on; then loud crashes to show its strength and wide range of possibilities. Try quick repetitions on the same keys to test the elasticity These tests show the superiority of the Welty action.

Don't buy the first piano you look at. The more you investigate the more you will appreciate the Welty. Call or write for full particulars.

Ramember you run no risk by buying from us. We have doné a successful business among you for over 28 years. Our guarantee is faithfully kept. Our instruments give entire satisfaction for a life-time. Possessing as he does a sympathetic heart, optimistic spirit, winsome manner and a homely philosophy, with a strong sense of humor, he will make you laugh, make you cry, make you think—send you away with greater faith in humanity, in God and in future civilization.

Bill Bone will appear as the second number of the lecture course at the opera house on the evening of Thursday, December, the 9th.

PAUL-SUCKOW

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Suckow in German township on Thnksgiving, November 25th, when their daughter Etna was married to Mr. Herman Paul of St. Louis, Missouri.

The ceremony was performed by Rev, W.J. Witter, while Mrs. Herman Stille played the wedding march. After the ceremony a bountiful wedding dinner was served and the afternoon spent by social conversation.

The groom has been working German township for some little time and is favorably known in the neighborhood of Klemme. She is of a winsome character and highly esteemed and loved by all that know her, and will be missed among the young people of Germantown.

They will leave in the near future for St. Louis, where they will make their future home. We take pleasure id joining with their many friends in wafting to them our well wishes.

Fort Will Not Meet With Success.

Rome, Nov. 29.—Although the efforts of Pope Benedict last year to obtain a truce among the warring powers over the Christmas holiday did not succeed, it is reported on good authority that the pope will make a similar attempt this year.

He is said to have brought up this question during his conference with Cardinal Von Hartman, archbishop of Cologne.

The pope is represented as having expressed the opinion that it is his duty to make the effort to obtain the truce, though the prospect that his proposal will be accepted is no more favorable than last year.

Frank Alvord Perret, whose knowledge of volcanoes is probably unique in the world, is an American, a native of Hartford, Conn. After volcanic outbursts he has been able accurately to forecast their conduct for some time to come, and in this way his labors have been of inestimable value to residents of volcanic districts. He has visited and studied practically every volcano in the world. He was the first to reach Messina after the devastating earthquake in 1908. As an inventor he is also widely known. In 1904 he took up volcanology and became honorary assistant to Professor Matteucci in the royal observatory, Mt. Vesuvius and was later decorated knight of the Italian crown.

Sulphur deposits are found on White island, in the Bay of Plenty on the coast of the north island of New Zealand, about 30 miles from the mainland. This island, which covers about 600 acres, attains a height of 900 feet on one side and opens to the sea on the other. Its topography indicates an old crater, and the boiling lake on the island, which is one of the awe-inspiring sights of New Zealand, is a further evidence of volcanism. After the New Zealand Sulphur company had spent $100,000 in preparation for mining sulphur in this locality, a volcanic disturbance wrecked the camp and killed 10 men

Harvey Lawrence, known among the inmates of the Huchinson (Kan.) reformatory as "the piece of a man," recently escaped from the institution. Lawrence acquired his name through his physical condition. He has lost one arm, one leg and one eye. He was sent up from Ford, Ford county, for stealing a Ford car. Lawrence is a chronic wanderer and told the officers at the time of his arrest he was tired of hopping around on one foot.

At 83, Sir William Crookes, the scientist, says he does not feel any different from what he was at 40. As to how to keep fit, here is his dictum: "A good deal of my own present feeling and position is due to the fact that I have always been working tolerably hard and always doing something I take a great interest in and am enthusiastic about. That, I think, keeps one's mind healthy and in good state, and tends to keep one going.

The first glove ever worn on the field by a ball player was the innovation, it is said, of a member of the "Unconquered Clippers of Illinois" in a game at Rockford. He was a machinist, and had hurt his palm, so inserted a thin sheet of steel in a fingerless glove with a palm of double thickness, therewith doing mighty deeds of valor on and around the third base corner, although his team lost by a score of 76 to 0.

Medical men are interested in the case of a Tyrolean soldier who was shot through the head in a battle along the southern front in the European war. The bullet passed clear through the brain, yet the man was not even stunned and was able to walk without assistance to a field hospital. Surgeons announce that he will be ready to return to the front in a short time.

The Belgian queen is an extremely warm hearted woman. It is told of her that long before the war, learning that a promising young artiste, a violinist, was desperately ill in squalid surroundings, the queen went to her aid, being herself a fine violinist, played all the girls' favorite music, repeating the visit daily until death made her aid unnecessary.

A deep and expensive oil well drilled in Oklahoma has finally been abandoned as hopeless and the owners attribute their hard luck to a black cat which appeared when work was started. In view of a cat's well known aversion to water it would have been more reasonable of them to look forward to an extraordinary strike of oil.

In Norway it has been found that whale meat, vast quantities of which have formerly been thrown away, makes a palatable and nutritious sausage. The meat has proved so successful for this purpose in Scandinavian countries that engineers are now working to develop machinery for cutting up the huge leviathans and working their carcasses into sausage.

IOWA FARMERS SELL ONLY SMALL PORTION OF CROPS EACH YEAR

Estimates Show That 75 Per Cent of Revenues Come From Sales of Animal Products.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 27.—Iowa farmers, reporting to the United States department of agriculture on what they sell off the farm in a typical year, say that 75 per cent represents live animals and animal products, 22 per cent crops and 3 per cent miscellaneous products.

Ivan Whitted, representing the Iowa department of agriculture, says that this report shows that the Iowa farmer is following the right policy, both to build up his farm and to get the most cash out of his efforts.

"There was a time in Iowa when the farmers sold most of their grain and field products," said Mr. Whitted. "In many cities there were two or more elevators to handle the grain. Now one elevator in a town will handle all of the grain in the district, and the elevator man has side lines to make his business profitable.

"The Iowa farmer has learned that it does not pay to sell his grain. He now feeds it to cattle and hogs. Selling crops often means depleting the soil, but feeding the grain and selling animals and animal products means enriching the soil.

"Iowa now has more hogs than the state has ever had at any time in its history. Hogs mean money to the farmer. The reports indicate that there are from 20 to 25 per cent more swine the state over than there are in normal years. And the state is reported to have but little hog cholera."

The reports to the government by farmers of other states as to what they sell from their farms indicate that their methods differ widely from those of Iowa farmers. The general average of the United States is 40 per cent crops, 36 per cent live animals, 20 per cent animal products, 4 per cent miscellany.

In the southern states the report shows that 75 per cent of the sales from farms are crops, 14 per cent live animals, 7 per cent animal products and 3 per cent miscellaneous.

REAL ESTATE BROKERS ARE ACQUITTED OF FRAUD CHARGE

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 27.—Messrs. Whitmore and W. A. Price, two real estate brokers of Des Moines, were freed of the charge of obtaining money by false pretenses from Myrtle Pine by a jury in the criminal branch of the district court.

Judge Dudley, presiding, sharply suppressed a demonstration by friends of the two defendants, who began to clap their hands when Chief Deputy William Baldwin read the verdict "not guilty."

When the clerk finished reading the verdict, a man standing near the door of the court room began to clap his hands. This was followed by a general outburst

As soon as Whitmore and Price were free they were surrounded by a number of their friends, who shook their hands and congratulated them.

Whitmore and Price were accused of misrepresenting a farm sold to Mrs. Myrtle Pine, located in Ringgold county. The woman claims she had been swindled out of $10,000

RELATIVES BRING PRESSURE FOR RELEASE OF BOGGS

Waterloo, Ia., Nov. 27.—E. A. Boggs, tombstone manufacturer of Waterloo, who was sent to the penitentiary for a term of five years upon conviction of larceny by embezzlement, is being considered by the state board of parole. Wealthy relatives and influential friends are urging the board to free Boggs.

The Boggs case was one which attracted statewide attention owing to the spirited fight made by the accused man to escape the penitentiary. He operated a tombstone plant. He was charged with taking contracts for tombstones and procuring notes in payment for them at the same time. He then took the contracts and notes to banks and procured double the amount of money on them which they really represented, it was charged. The fight to save him was carried through the supreme court and to the governor.

WIFE'S FRIEND SAVED BY REVOLVER MISSING FIRE

Shenandoah, Ia., Nov. 27.—The failure of a revolver in the hands of a jealous husband probably saved the life of Mrs. Charles McCann and her friend, Glen True, when Mr. McCann, who is employed on a dredge boat in Arkansas, arrived all the way from the southern state with the intent purpose of "cleaning up the bunch" and found his wife receiving the caller at the home of her mother, Mrs. William Franks, who lives in an apartment house at 125 East Grant avenue. A struggle followed when the pointed gun did not work, in which Mr. True overpowered the enranged husband. Neighbors were attracted to the home by the noise of the fight, among them being C. A. Wenstrand, mayor, who lives close by.

In response to his request for a speedy trial, the preliminary hearing was waived and Judge George H. Castle, of the Superior court, bound the prisoner over to the grand jury on the charge of assault with intent to kill

"MOSQUITO FLEET" REPLACES HEAVY FIRE EQUIPMENT

Davenport, Ia., Nov. 27.—The problem of adequate fire protection for small cities, towns and villages seems to have been solved here. The city has ceased to purchase heavy and expensive fire fighting apparatus and has invested in a "mosquito fleet," composed of hose wagon bodies mounted upon light automobiles, and in spite of the fun poked at the city council since the little cars were ordered a few days ago, the members of the council and the fire department of the city are certain the experiment will be successful.

Credit for the purchase must be given to an alderman who failed to see any great economy in the proposed purchase of several new trucks for the fire department at an average cost of $3,500, of which 25 per cent is said to be "municipal selling expense."

FORT DODGE—Parents of Julia Brown and Fort Dodge police are scouring the country looking for her, although they hopes that no worse fate has befallen her than that she has eloped. However, the case may develop a more serious turn. YOUTH OF 15 ADMITS THAT HE CHOKED AND ROBBED GRANDMOTHER

Took $60 From Aged Woman and Spent Money In Riotous Time In Omaha.

Council Bluffs, Ia., Nov. 27.—George Davis, the 15-year-old Omaha boy who choked and robbed his grandmother, Mrs. Susan Davis, in Council Bluffs, made a full confession to Chief of Police Vein.

According to his story, he obtained $60 from the aged woman and had $1.55 in his possession when arrested. He said he had spent the money at the rate of $10 per night for a room in Omaha and in a poker game with a stranger.

Hal Davis, 2622 South Seventeenth street, Council Bluffs, the boy's uncle, states that this is not the first time the boy had robbed his grandmother. At one time, he said, after the boy had taken $5 from her on the pretext of getting it changed, she was forced to borrow money from a neighbor to get home. The grandmother is 78 years of age. She has practically raised the boy and has many times given him spending money.

The parents of young Davis are separated and his father, G. M. Davis, of Omaha, was married again two months ago. The question of his age may be the deciding point as to whether he shall be sent to the reformatory or prison. He claims that he is only 15.

FIGHT OVER LITTLE GIRL IN PLYMOUTH DISTRICT COURT

LeMars, Ia., Nov 27 —An interesting habeas corpus case came up for hearing here Tuesday before the judge over the possession of a 2-year-old girl, Elizabeth Griffiths. The child has been cared for by her grandmother, Mrs. Amelia Link, who resides at Remsen The father of the tot, E. F. Griffiths, whose wife is dead, showed little interest in the child until recently, whereas the grandmother has cared for the little one, who has become endeared to her. Griffiths claimed he had furnished money and clothing for the child, which statement was contradicted by the evidence of Remsen witnesses, one of whom cited that once Griffith had obtained some clothes for the child, but, as yet, had failed to pay for them. After hearing the evidence and the arguments, Judge Boies gave the custody of the child to the grandmother, Mrs. Link.

MONONA SHERIFF HOLDS SUPPOSED INSANE MAN

Onawa, Ia., Nov. 27.—A stranger came to Onawa and took rooms for the night at the Alsbrow rooming house and managed to keep up noise enough to disturb other roomers. He acted so queerly on the street that Sheriff Martin took him in charge and has placed him in the county jail.

He gives his names as James Murphy Roberts and says he has been harvesting at Minot, N D. He also informed the sheriff that he had been an inmate of a California insane asylum.

The fellow has the appearance of one who is just recovering from a heavy drinking spree, and the sheriff has hopes that in a few days he will be able to continue his journey

IOWA CITY—Three alleged bank robbers, Ray Martin, J. B. Williams and John (Brooklyn Red) Murphy, were discharged Wednesday morning after a preliminary hearing in the Iowa county court at Marengo. They were accused of complicity in the Parnell Savings bank robbery. The evidence was considered insufficient to convict. Murphy was rearrested and will be taken to Centerville on a gambling charge.

IOWA CITY—His heart dilating wildly through fright when a runaway horse dashed clatteringly past him, Albert D Davis, department manager of Yetter's dry goods store, was prostrated and died a half hour later, during the momentary absence of his wife, who left him on an errand, supposing he had rallied. He was 66. His widow survives.

CHEROKEE—Fred Powers, who was acquitted two weeks ago on the charge of having murdered Mural Conley was bound over to the grand jury on the charge of carrying concealed weapons, after having had a preliminary hearing before Justice Green.

DES MOINES—A marriage license was issued here Wednesday to J A Tracey, aged 55, of Winterset, and Mrs. Harriet Irons, aged 50, of Plankinton, S. D., formerly of Afton.

A Dutch expedition has recently finished mapping Dutch New Guinea, which is about 14 times as large as the Netherlands and includes the greater part of the island of Paqua in the South seas. "DRYS" TO CELEBRATE SALOON CLOSING WITH MANY WATCH PARTIES

To Hold Special Praise Services In Church as Clock Records Prohibition Era.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 25.—Prohibition forces of Iowa have begun a movement to celebrate the repeal of the mulct law with special watch meetings in the churches of every city on New Year's eve.

The action of the 36th general assembly in adopting the Clarkson law will close all grog shops in Iowa at 9 p. m., December 31. The ministerial associations and reform organizations of the state have been asked to adopt resolutions favoring special thanksgiving on the night the saloons close permanently.

These resolutions, the leaders say, will be presented to Governor Clarke with the request that he issue a proclamation calling attention to the victory of the prohibition forces.

The Anti-Saloon league of the United States now claims 20 "dry" states. They are: Iowa, Maine, Kansas, North Dakota, Utah, Oklahoma, Mississippi, North Carolina, Tennessee, West Virginia, Arizona, Colorado, Oregon, Washington, Alabama, Arkansas, Idaho, Virginia, South Carolina and Georgia.

The prohibition forces of Iowa are preparing to meet reported opposition to the closing of saloons in Davenport. According to word received at the state department of justice, the liquor dealers of the state are getting ready to quit the business on the first of the year, with the exception of those in Scott county.

LOW WAGES OF HUSBANDS COMPEL WOMEN TO WORK

Waterloo, Ia., Nov. 24.—Low wages earned by husbands were found to form the greatest factor in causing married women to go to work, by a special investigation into occupational conditions among women of Iowa, Mrs. Ellen M. Rourke, state factory inspector, told delegates to the Iowa state conference of charities and Correction here today.

Women and girls employed in laundries and telephone exchanges were selected because of the extreme conditions in their employments. That of the telephone girl being sedentary and light, but under a severe nervous strain, while that of laundry workers required excessive physical labor. There were 1,296 laundry workers and 1,077 telephone workers interviewed, Mrs. Rourke said. Of the 324 married women interviewed, there were half whose husbands were out of work or were not steadily employed, and 67 whose husbands were incapacitated for work through sickness or physical disability

MANY CHANGES MADE IN PLYMOUTH RURAL ROUTES

LeMars, Ia., Nov 25.—A radical change in the local rural mail routes will be inaugurated on December 1 of this year. Such is the theme of communication and set of instructions received by Postmaster J. E. Kelley from Washington. The change is something in the form of a consolidation of the routes in which the route known now as route No 8 will cease to exist and the route known at the present time as route 10 will be given the number eight. The elimination of route 8 does not mean that the service will be withdrawn from the territory covered by the route, but that the territory will be divided and merged into two of the other routes, two and seven. In case of route No. 2, several miles have been taken off and will be handled by route No. 2 out of Hinton. Under the new system of routing, a change will take place in the carriers also. George Hammet, present carrier of route 7, has tendered his resignation and will quit the service December 1, while Joe Forsyth, carrier of route 8, has also submitted his resignation The position of carrier on route 7 will probably be filled by transfer, while the open position will be filled with a new man Ted Reis will continue as carrier of route 1 and Melvin Bixby of route 2

YOUNG BANDIT'S DEATH EXPOSED BOX CAR ROBBERIES

Council Bluffs, Ia., Nov 25 —The Northwestern railroad men here are checking up the merchandise in a car that was broken into some time Saturday night near Marion, and which, incidentally, resulted in the death of a young man said to be named James Hardy, 24 years of age, residence unknown.

Hardy is the name given by his pall, who said his name was McKinly, who is now under arrest at Newhall. The merchandise boxes in the car, entrance to which had been gained by forcing an end door, was damaged and it is believed that considerable was thrown from the car while the train was enroute From the circumstances, it appears that Hardy was standing on the bumpers receiving the stolen goods and that he was thrown off Nearly 20 of the 79 cars in the train passed over his body, which was fearfully mangled It is suspicioned that the two men were members of a gang which has been systematically robbing the trains of merchandise for months. In the pockets of the overcoat of the dead youth was found the lugs from the car door which had been pried off

PARSONS COLLEGE AND IOWA WESLEYAN WILL CONSOLIDATE

Ottumwa, Ia., Nov. 25 —Merger of Parsons and Iowa Wesleyan colleges became practically a certainty last evening when heads of the two schools in conference here adopted a resolution recommending that such a move be taken as will mean future maintenance of only one denominational college in the southeastern section of Iowa.

No recommendations were made as to the location of the institution resulting from the merger. However, President Schell, of Wesleyan, declared after the resolution had been adopted that neither Fairfield nor Mount Pleasant, homes of Parsons and Wesleyan respectively, are assured of being the new college's location.

This action is the latest chapter of a plan which in its original conception contemplated the organization of the Iowa Union college, to be a merger of Parsons Wesleyan and Simpson.

DES MOINES—The trial of Ed Wegener, ex-saloonkeeper, of Valley Junction, on a charge of hatching a plot to kidnap Charles Ashworth some time ago, was featured by the return to the city of Frank Lavelle, who is undergoing a 20-year sentence at Fort Madison for complicity in the crime. Lavelle will act as a witness for the state against Wegener.

IDA GROVE—Mornday morning at his residence in this city occurred the death of H P Sonnichsen, from a complication of diseases, after months of suffering He had lived in Ida county 40 years Mrs Sonnichsen and three sons, William, Herber and Edward survive

MORRISSEY, ALLEGED PUGILIST, MAY FACE WHITE SLAVE CHARGE

Woman Who Accompanied Him to Des Moines Will Be Taken Before Grand Jury.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 24.—Frank Patsey Morrison, central Nebraska pugilist, may have to fight white slavery charges in the United States district court. The police department determined to take Mrs. Fred Eaton, with whom Morrison was arrested in a room on Third street, before the federal grand jury.

Mrs. Eaton has remained silent under police questioning since arrest until Sunday. Then her sister, who came to Des Moines from no one knows where, and who refuses to tell the police her name, prevailed upon her to tell the whole story.

Mrs. Eaton, it is claimed, admitted coming from Omaha to Des Moines with Morrison, but she insisted that she had purchased her own railroad ticket. Under certain circumstances, Immigration Inspector Whitfield told the police, white slavery may be proved even when the man did not furnish the transportation. Eaton took his two little children back to Newport, Neb., Friday. He said he would be back to Des Moines to push prosecution of the case.

IOWA SOCIAL WORKERS IN SESSION AT WATERLOO

Waterloo, Ia., Nov. 24.—The 17th Iowa state conference of Charities and Correction opened here Sunday with social settlement and sociological workers from all parts of Iowa in attendance. The pulpits of Waterloo were occupied yesterday by conference representatives and in the afternoon a mass meeting marked the opening session of the conference, which was presided over by Prof. G. T. Wyckoff, of Grinnell, president. The address of welcome was delivered by Rev. J. E. Johnson and the response by President Wyckoff.

Papers were read and addresses delivered by Dr. A. J. Todd, of the University of Minnesota; Edward T. Devine, of the New York School of Philanthropy; Charles C. Stillman, of St. Paul, and Roger Baldwin, of St. Louis.

SAC CITY HAS PROSPECT OF NEW NORTHWESTERN DEPOT

Sac City, Ia., Nov. 24.—E. B. McClure, of Sioux City, superintendent of the Sioux City division of the Northwestern railway, in an address at the annual banquet of the Sac City Commercial club at the Park hotel, made the announcement that a new passenger station will be erected in Sac City, to be ready for occupancy some time during 1916. It will replace the old station, which has been used since the railroad was built through Sac City. The new station is to be built a block south of the present location. The present structure will be used as a freight depot.

About 125 men were present at the banquet. Floyd Douglas, secretary of the Fort Dodge Commercial club, made an address on "Co-Operation." All of last year's officers of the club were re-elected, namely: Dr. J. H. Stalford, president; Dr. W. J. Findley, vice president; R. R. Cobb, secretary; John Fox, treasurer

C. C. HORTON TO RETIRE FROM IOWA SOLDIERS' HOME

Marshalltown, Ia., Nov. 24.—Commandant C. C Horton, of the Iowa soldiers' home, whose resignation, effective May 1, 1916, has been announced by the state board of control, will end the longest career as a commandant of the home of any one man. Colonel Horton has been at the head of the institution 18 years. He was reappointed for a term of four years, beginning January 1, 1915, but is leaving the service for the state because he feels that he has held the position long enough, and is now entitled to a rest at his age, 76 years. Colonel Horton will go to Wyoming to make his home with his sons, J. Lisle Horton, at Clearmont, and Frank Horton, at Buffalo.

LOGAN MAXSON CAUGHT IN SECOND RUNNING FIGHT

Logan, Ia., Nov. 24.—As a result of a long and determined search on the part of Sheriff Myers and Deputy Atkins and the active cooperation of the police at Norfolk, Neb., Sheriff Myers returned from Norfolk yesterday afternoon with Logan Maxwell, charged with complicity in alleged robberies in which Scott brothers, near Woodbine, are losers.

A short time ago Sheriff Myers spotted Maxson in Omaha, but, in a five block footrace, Maxson outran the sheriff, however, when the officer learned tha Maxson was heading for Norfolk he promptly notified the police and they began work, located the man, kept him under surveillance, then arrested him. When within 50 feet of the police station, Maxson jumped and ran and the three officers after him, firing a number of shots. After a long chase the officers finally arrested him and found that one of the shots had struck him in the heel, penetrating the shoe, but had not broken the skin.

FARMER KILLED BY AUTO ON LINCOLN HIGHWAY

Perry, Ia., Nov. 24.—George Eckard, a farmer whose home is near Yale, was killed in an automobile accident Saturday night at a spot two miles east of Ogden, on the Lincoln highway. H. E. Drafahal of Grand Junction, who was with him in the car, received a broken jaw and other bruises.

Eckard had not driven a car very long and when the rear wheels began to skid he lost control of the machine and it turned over in a ditch. Both men were pinned underneath. Help arrived about five minutes after the accident and the machine was lifted off the men, but Eckard's life was crushed under the steering wheel.

LAYS CLAIM TO TITLE OF CHAMPION WOMAN HUSKER

Shenandoah, Ia., Nov. 22.—Shucking 35 bushels of corn Friday afternoon, Miss Delia Liebforth, of Northboro, Ia., lays claim to be the champion woman corn husker of southwestern Iowa.

EDWARD WEGENER WILL RELY ON INSANITY POSE

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 22.—Insanity will be the defense of Edward Wegener, former saloon man and real estate dealer of Valley Junction, accused of being an accomplice of Frank Lavelle, on the afternoon Charles H. Ashworth was assaulted and robbed after being lured into an alley of the village. All of the tangled threads of the sensational story will be unraveled this week, when Wegener will be brought to trial before Judge Dudley in the criminal court

FORD PAYS PEACE PARTY BILLS BUT FEW WANT TO

Auto Manufacturer Having Hard Time to Collect Delegation to Help Him End European Strife.

HIS ARDOR IS UNDAUNTED

"Will Have Boys Out of Trenches By Christmas" Says—Effort Not Indorsed By Cardinal Gibbons.

Baltimore, Md., Nov 29.—Henry Ford, the Detroit manufacturer, [illegible] upon Cardinal Gibbons today, [illegible] though the cardinal devoutly [illegible] Mr. Ford's hopes for a successful [illegible] mination of his peace trip to Europe by Christmas, he was averse to giving it his formal approval

He said he felt there were too many formidable difficulties in the way.

Mr. Ford asked Cardinal Gibbons to suggest names of prominent persons whose interest he thought could be enlisted, but the cardinal said he preferred to leave that to Mr Ford's own judgment.

Upon leaving the cardinal Mr. Ford said he was going to Philadelphia where he had a dinner engagement with John Wanamaker

Mr. Ford is apparently having difficulty in getting his peace party together. Every mail brings refusals from governors and other high officials who cannot see their way clear to join the party. Apparently, however, he is not dismayed and still hopes to have a creditable delegation accompany him on his European trip

He's Still Confident.

"We will have the boys out of the trenches—all of them—by Christmas day," said Henry Ford in speaking of his peace mission to Europe.

The steamer Oscar II, of the Scandinavian-American line which will carry the Ford peace party to Europe, will leave here December 4 As yet the steamer's destination is undecided Ford is paying all the expenses of the peace party.

Throughout his talk with newspaper representatives, Mr Ford spoke with conviction and confidence He declared the strongest hope of working for peace was the sentiment of the soldiers themselves against the war.

"We know this, if we don't know anything else in the world—that there isn't a man in the trenches who wants war. We know also that 99 per cent of the people in the world don't want war. The 1 per cent who do want war are only the people who make money out of it. They are all right, only they were taught wrong

Could Aid Humanity.

"There are men making munitions in this country now who, if they turned their energies to prevention of war, it would make for construction instead of destruction They could do things for humanity never heard of before.

"In place of organizing men of great ability for naval boards, or inventive boards, why not get a board of inventors to pass on articles that are to be used for the benefit of humanity instead of the destruction of humanity? They can be selected from the ablest men in the world."

WILSON HAS OWN IDEAS ABOUT MOVING FOR PEACE

[From The Tribune Bureau.]

Washington, Nov 27 - President Wilson, according to men close to him, is sympathetic with the peace movement which Henry Ford, Mrs. Snow, Mme. Schwimmer and others are promoting, but when he believes the time has come to move for peace he will move his own way

He is not opposing any movement which tend to accelerate peace sentiment and, especially, peace sentiment abroad. His official advices lead him to believe the time for action has not yet come.

When that time does come it is predicted here by those in touch with the White House he will act directly on a plan of his own and in which the United States will be the chief instrument of mediation or interposition in the matter of ending the war

A close friend of the president said today that when action came it would be on the Wilson plan and not on that of any Ford's plan or on that of any other man.

ASK WARSHIP CONVOY FOR AMERICAN LINER

Trans-Atlantic Company Fears Seizure of Ship Suspected By British Navy.

New York, Nov 29.—The American Trans-Atlantic company, several of whose steamships have been seized by British warships, under suspicion that German ownership awaits today's answer from Secretary of State Lansing to its request that an American warship be sent to Buenos Ayres to convoy its steamer Winnebago to an American port and save her from capture by British cruisers.

The vessels recently purchased by this company have been placed under American registry, but have been detained as "suspected" by the British government.

The Winnebago is loaded with lumber wood for Stanford, Conn., but the company does not dare to order her home, fearing that British warships are lying in wait. The American Trans-Atlantic company is collecting affidavits to prove that only American citizens and American capital are interested in the ownership of its fleet.

JOHN BULL OBTAINS SHORT TIME CREDIT

Additional Loan of $50,000,000 For Six Months Arranged By New York Banks.

New York, Nov 29—The committee of bankers which recently was organized to perfect an additional British credit, today announced that a six months' loan of $50,000,000 bearing 4½ per cent interest and secured by 11,000,000 pounds sterling, British government bonds had been arranged

The bonds are to be deposited in the Bank of England by the borrowers, who represent eight of London's most prominent institutions The lenders are various banks and trust companies of this city and the interior, and other home institutions will be given participation

A half year will be the duration of this particular loan and no extension beyond that period is contemplated It is understood, however, that other loans of similar character will be undertaken by American bankers from time to time is the existences of the international situation dictate

BRITAIN EXPECTS EARLY PROPOSALS

Hirst Believes Peace Overtures Soon Will Be Advanced—Public Stirred By Tax on Profits.

BY FRANCIS W. HIRST,
Editor "The Economist," London.

London, Nov 29.—The abolition of minimum prices for consols and foreign bonds is a welcome step toward the restoration of natural conditions and one for which the stock exchange has been long prepared Banking interests have been complaining of the delay, which has been a grave inconvenience, since salability in war or peace is essential to good security At present the 2½ per cent consols at 58 are equivalent to more than 69 for 3 per cent In the Napoleonic wars, 3 per cent consols once fell to 47, and it was this fall which led Pitt to introduce the income tax.

Concerning the new French international war loans, a controversy has arisen as to whether exemption from taxes includes exemption from any future income tax Apparently the statement of the French finance minister on Novembe 12 only exempts from present taxes and not from any future income tax, should such be imposed after the war

The house of commons discussions indicate that many of the members are deeply interested in the excess profits tax, but the chancellor of the exchequer has resisted most of the amendments offered, and the tax probably will yield a very large revenue for a couple of years.

Reginald McKenna's proposed 5 1 bond will require compulsion behind it if large savings are really to be squeezed out of prosperous wage earners.

THREE INFANTRYMEN SHOT BY MEXICANS

Villa and Carranza Snipers Fire on American Troops—One Soldier Killed.

Washington, Nov 29 The official report to the war department on the Nogales affair arrived here from Major General Funston transmitting the substance of a report from the commanding officer at Nogales follows

"In the action of November 26, no shots were fired by us, except in return of Mexican fire. This applies to both Villistas and the advance Carranza troops under Colonel Cardenas, who opened fire on the troops of the Tenth cavalry under Captain Valentine and company L, Twelfth infantry The latter company had three casualties Private Little, mortally wounded in head, died at 9 o'clock last night. Private Cates, flesh wound in abdomen, Private Sauhe, wounded in ankle, the two latter will recover"

It was stated about 20 Mexicans were killed.

Nogales, Ariz., Nov 29.—Gen. Alvaro Obregon, whose Carranza forces occupied Noagles, Sonora, yesterday after Villa snipers had exchanged shots with United States troops stationed along the international boundary line, was preparing today to take the field in an effort to run down the remaining Villa soldiers who fled from the Mexican town.

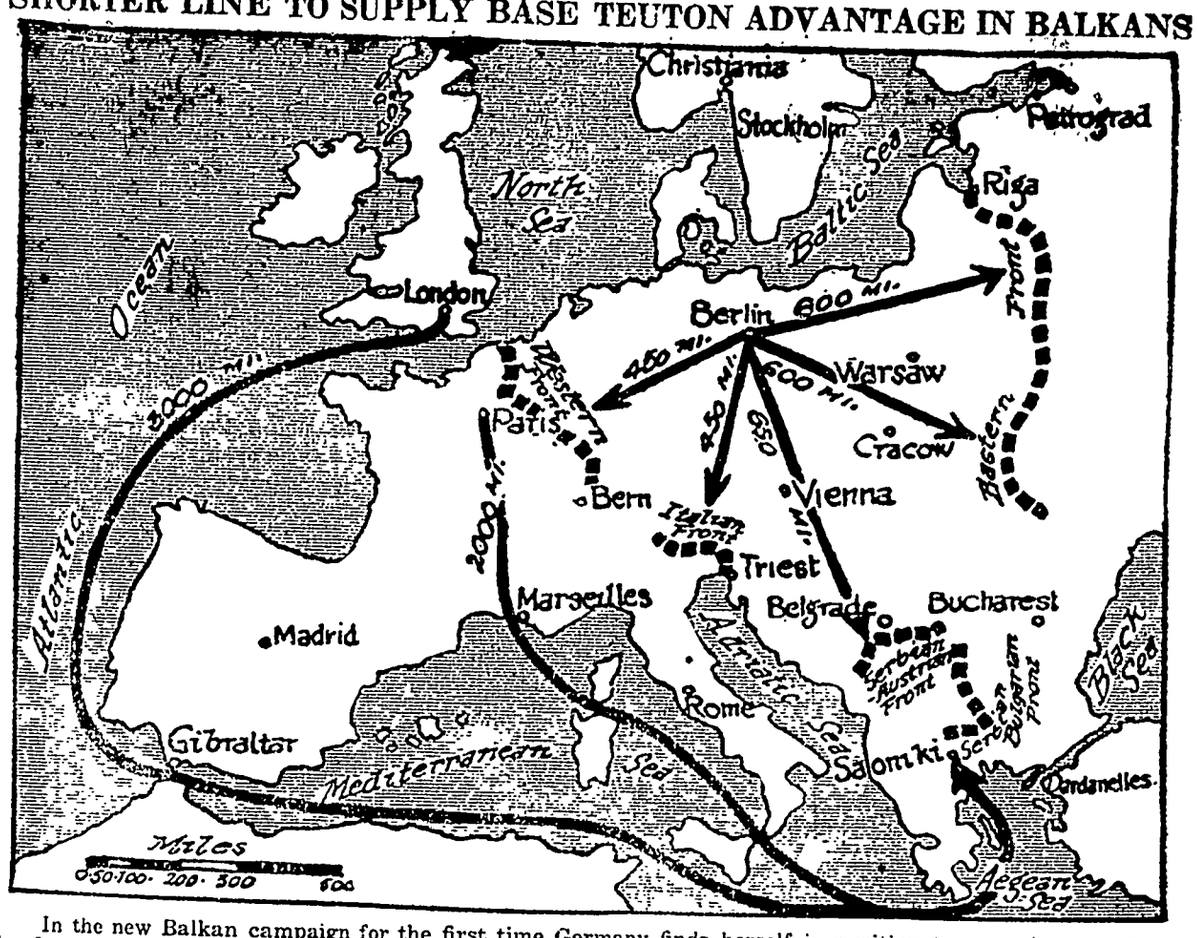
SHORTER LINE TO SUPPLY BASE TEUTON ADVANTAGE IN BALKANS



In the new Balkan campaign for the first time Germany finds herself in position to move her supplies to the front over a shorter route than the allies. This gives Germany the advantage, as the more men an army must use in transporting supplies from its base to the front, the fewer it can use in actual warfare.

HUERTA FINANCED BY GERMAN MONEY

Carranza Gets Documents and Turns Them Over to United States—Hoped to Embroil Uncle Sam.

New York, Nov. 29.—Details of the conspiracy by which millions of dollars of German money was to restore Gen. Victoriano Huerta to the dictatorship in Mexico and thus bring this country into war with the Mexicans were learned yesterday from officials in this city representing the Carranza administration

The story involves Franz Rintelen, the wealthy German who arrived in this country at the same time that Huerta came here from Barcelona, Spain, where he was visited by German agents. It shows that of the $50,000,000 which certain German sympathizers had at their disposal for embroiling this government in Mexico more than $16,000,000 had already been placed at the disposal of General Huerta's representatives in different places, that $95,000 of that money has recently been seized in the Sud-Deutsch-Amerikanische bank in Mexico City, that $600,000 more of the fund is now in another branch of the same bank in Havana, Cuba, where proceedings will be instituted by Carranza's representatives to impound it.

Hoped to Embarrass America.

These facts and others, outlining the entire conspiracy meant to put the United States in such a position that the shipment of arms and ammunition from this country to the allies would be stopped, and to give this country such trouble that no strong representations could be made to Germany concerning its submarine warfare, have been obtained from Huerta's correspondence and various other documents in his possession.

Practically every detail of the part that Huerta had planned to play in starting a new revolution in Mexico—his meetings with his aids in this city, his conferences with Germans, including Rintelen and also a member of the German embassy, the arrangements for the shipment of arms and ammunition to Mexico, the plots for causing defections from Villa's and Carranza's armies in Mexico—is included in the letters and documents which the Carranza officials obtained.

All those documents have been turned over to the federal officials, and they have been partly influential in guiding the Wilson administration in the last six months in its dealings with Carranza. They have, in fact, caused them, it is said, to give more consideration to Carranza than had formerly been the plan

REMOVE COPPER ROOF OF KAISER'S PALACE

Metal Will Be Used to Manufacture Munitions For German Armies.

Basel, Switzerland, Nov. 29.—The copper roof is being taken from the imperial castle at Donaueschingen, Germany, and will be used in the manufacture of munitions of war. This roof weighs many tons.

This is not the first time that metal has been requisitioned from an imperial residence. The emperor's palace in Berlin was visited the latter part of September by the commission having in charge the seizure of metal for government use and a list of the metals at the court was demanded. Emperor William ordered that all metals not in actual necessary use be seized. It was reported recently that the huge copper roofs of the cathedral at Bremen were being dismantled for military purposes.

MRS. CARL HOVEY ENDS LIFE.

New York, Nov. 27.—Mrs. Jean Edgerton Hovey, authoress, was found dead today in her room, a blanket over her head, her door locked and gas pouring from a tube attached to a jet. Her husband, Carl Hovey, editor of the Metropolitan Magazine, said that he knew of no reason why she should take her life. They had been living apart for some time.

LOSES $17,000 WORTH OF GEMS.

HOLIDAY TRUCE URGED BY POPE

Prospect Is That Effort Will Not Meet With Success.

Rome, Nov. 29.—Although the efforts of Pope Benedict last year to obtain a truce among the warring powers over the Christmas holiday did not succeed, it is reported on good authority that the pope will make a similar attempt this year.

He is said to have brought up this question during his conference with Cardinal Von Hartman, archbishop of Cologne.

The pope is represented as having expressed the opinion that it is his duty to make the effort to obtain the truce, although the prospect that his proposal will be accepted is no more favorable than last year.

OVERSEAS TRUST IS NOT INDORSED

Federal Government Refuses to Sanction Concern Giving Preferential Treatment to Some Shippers.

Washington, Nov. 29.—Great Britain has informally asked the United States if it would unofficially approve the American Overseas trust and the state department has replied that under no circumstances could any sanction be given to an organization which would receive preferential treatment over other American shippers.

Sweden also has made similar inquiry and has been advised that the plan had not been indorsed. It developed that part of the plan of the trust was to organize subsidiaries in neutral countries and that a measure of supervision was to be given to the British government by permitting access to the books of the concern in neutral countries. Sweden informed Great Britain that she would not approve such a plan.

State department officials declared today that the Overseas trust organizers now realize they could not hope to get moral assistance from the American government so long as their plan contemplated preferential treatment for one set of American shippers as against others. That feature has now been abandoned and a representative of the trust is in London negotiating with the British government to the end that the latter will have no connection with the new organization.

Officials at the state department made it clear that they did not know the details of the new plan and would reserve judgment until it was laid before them. It was explained also that the department of commerce had not given its approval to the Overseas trust, merely stipulating that the plan would be acceptable if no discrimination were practiced.

BALD DOME IS CRAZY IMMUNE

Men With Shiny Knobs Need Not Fear the Insane Asylun.

Monroe, Wis., Nov. 29.—Here is a grain of comfort for the bald headed men.

No matter to what extent they are compelled to bear the ridicule of their friends because of their shining domes, and no matter how remorse may grip their souls as they see their hair going, the fact that it is falling out is a guarantee they will never be inmates of an insane asylum.

This is the declaration of Dr. Robert B. Clark, who has made a lifelong study of insanity and mental diseases.

"I have examined several hundred patients regarding their sanity," said Dr. Clark. "I have had the opportunity of studying many, hundreds of others in the asylums of the country, and in all of my experience I have yet, with a single exception, to see an insane man who was bald headed."

BRITISH DRAWING CLOSER TO BAGDAD

Turks Defeated at Ctesiphon and Forced Back to Within Ten Miles of That Ancient City.

London, Nov. 29.—The battle between British and Turkish forces at Ctesiphon, near Bagdad, which for a time looked like a check to the Mesopotamian expedition is now reported to have been a success of first importance.

Information received today that the retirement of the British after the capture of Ctesiphon, occasioned by the lack of water, was only temporary. After the Turks withdrew in the direction of Bagdad, as announced officially yesterday, the British reoccupied their former position. The Turks offered little opposition as they took possession of Ctesiphon for the second time.

British troops at once began the work of clearing the Turkish trenches, which were filled with dead or wounded soldiers. The British captured a large quantity of arms and ammunition, in addition to the 1,300 prisoners previously reported. Ctesiphon has been the scene of many fateful battles. The ancient city was besieged and plundered a dozen times by Greek and Roman invaders from the east before the Arabs finally sacked it.

Troops engaged in this region are undergoing hardships unknown in other campaigns, there being a shortage of both food and water. The Turks are said to be retreating to Dialah, within 10 miles of Bagdad.

An official statement received here today from Constantinople confirms the British report that after the recent battle in Mesopotamia, the Turks retired, but adds:

"Our advance troops inflicted on the enemy very considerable losses in dead."

ENGLISH SUFFRAGETS ASK FOR ACCOUNTING

Women Are Up In Arms Against Leadership of Mrs. Pankhurst and Daughter.

London, Nov. 29.—Many members of the Woman's Social and Political union have revolted against the leadership of Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst. A largely attended meeting, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Elinor Penn Gaskell, unanimously approved a long indictment against Mrs. Pankhurst.

In this indictment, those who attended the meeting, charge that in using the name of the Women's Social and Political union for political purposes, Mrs. Pankhurst was acting without authority, "the consent of the members not having been asked or obtained." They blame her for failing to utilize the organization for some form of national service during the war, which service is said to be in accordance with the desire of an overwhelming majority of the members, the disregard of which, coupled with Mrs. Pankhurst's complete control of the funds and local machinery, has been virtually to disband and break up the W. S. P. U. as a national organization."

"They accuse her of usurping authority and expelling members who differ from her, in order to stifle opposition to her will, resulting in the removal from the membership of almost all the women possessed of influence, capacity and independence of thought. They declare that, when controlling funds, she has shown callous indifference to the sufferings of destitute members.

Finally, they call upon Mrs. Pankhurst to issue immediately a statement showing how the funds have been expended since the war began. They ask Christabel Pankhurst, her daughter, to resign or explain her continued absence from the country.

GOULD MAY BE SUED.

New York, Nov. 27.—B. F. Bush, receiver for the Missouri Pacific railroad today was authorized to file suit in the federal district court here to recover from George Gould property which the latter is said to hold in trust provided Gould does not surrender the title to the property in 30 days.

LACK OF VESSELS CHOKES RAILWAYS; EMBARGO ORDERED

D. L. & W. Forced to Stop Taking Shipments For New York —Other Roads Swamped With Traffic.

UNABLE TO MOVE CARS

Thousands of Loaded Cars Are Stalled—Some on Sidings For 80 Days—Ships Needed to Clear Docks.

New York, Nov. 29.—The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western railroad, whose lines are choked as far back as Scranton, with loaded freight cars it cannot move today, instructed its agents to accept no more freight for export until further notice.

More than 6,000 loaded cars from the west, all containing grain, feed, flour, copper and hundreds of other commodities, have virtually turned the terminals, and sides of the road into a storage warehouse for weeks. Some of the cars have been here for 80 days.

All Railroads Glutted.

Inquiry at other railroad offices developed that nearly every road with a terminus here is glutted with freight cars standing loaded and idle on sidings for hundreds of miles back along the line and that other roads would follow the Lackawanna's lead shortly.

For months New York, mouth of the bottle through which pours the great bulk of America's export trade, has been clogged with freight in excess of the facilities of the steamship companies attempting to handle it. The movement of the big cereal crops and the unprecedented demand in Europe for copper, steel and other metals used in warfare has swollen exports within the past 60 days to figures undreamed of before.

In October alone exports to the value of approximately $175,000,000 left New York on 393 ships.

Let Ships Catch Up.

The temporary check to the incoming tide is for the purpose, it was said today, of enabling the steamship companies to catch up in part with the traffic and to permit the railroads to clear their terminals and sidings. The Lackawanna's order says that shipments billed up to and including November 27, will be accepted.

Pittsburgh, Nov. 27. — Enormous shipments of freight for export continue to go east from the Pittsburgh district in spite of congested terminals at important Atlantic seaboard points, and in yards along the various railroads between here and New York. Railroad officials said today that every possible expedient was being used to handle the tremendous freight movement, even to the liberal expenditure of money for additional terminals.

One official said that the lines were not suffering so much from lack of cars as in the past, but from lack of track room many cars being held because it was impossible to secure dock space for their contents while waiting for vessel.

MAKE RESERVATIONS FOR 1916 CONVENTION

Republicans Anticipate Next National Meeting Will Be Held In Chicago.

Chicago, Nov. 29.—Hotel reservations for republican delegations from nine states have been made here, it became known today, in the anticipation that the 1916 republican national convention will be awarded to Chicago.

Senator John W. Weeks, of Massachusetts, reserved an entire floor for the Massachusetts delegation, also a suite for himself and a suite for W. Murray Crane, former United States senator. New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Indiana, Minnesota and Iowa, are among the states for which reservations have been made.

Individual reservations included the names of former Vice President Charles W. Fairbanks, James P. Goodrich, of Indiana; Myron T. Herrick, of Ohio; Congressman James R. Mann, of Illinois, members of the Indiana state central committee, and Joseph B. Kealing and David Mulvane, who were identified with former campaigns.

Republican national committeemen will meet in Washington on December 14, to decide where the party's convention will be held.

PASSENGERS RESCUED FROM BURNING VESSEL

Norfolk, Va., Nov. 27.—The steamers, City of Baltimore and the Florida from Baltimore, both arrived here this morning with a number of people rescued from the steamer Tivoli, burned last night in Chesapeake bay, below Annapolis.

It is feared some lives were lost, but among those arriving today none knew anything definite.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 27.—One person is dead and four are missing of the 58 people known to have been on board the steamer, Tivoli. Mrs. Eva Bowden, a passenger, who was ill, died on a life raft. The missing are two children of Captain Howard, commander of the Tivoli and two of the crew. It is thought they may have been taken aboard a rescue tug and removed to Cape Charles.

The cause of the fire could not be learned.

PURSUED BY CRUISER.

New York, Nov. 28.—The American steamer Zealandia, which was recently boarded and searched by an officer and men from the British cruiser at Progreso, Mex., arrived here today and reported having been pursued last night by an unknown cruiser off the New Jersey coast between Brigantine shoals and Tucker beach. The night was unusually hazy and the Zealandia ran inside the three mile limit and escaped.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

QUIT MEAT IF YOUR KIDNEYS ACT BADLY

Take tablespoonful of Salts if Back hurts or Bladder bothers—Drink lots of water.

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid, says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog, and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead, and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

WIRELESS MEN PLAN TO MEET EMERGENCY

Marconi Heads Association to Enroll and Assist 200,000 Amateurs.

From the New York Sun.

The National Amateur Wireless association—a comprehensive organization formed for the development and training of amateur wireless workers throughout the country—came into existence recently.

Its founders, headed by Guglielmo Marconi, president of the Marconi Wireless Telegraph company, hope to interest the 200,000 amateurs in a greater development of their experiments by co-operative or group working, so that in case of emergency the nation may have a reserve body of operators.

It is the view of the organizers that the amateur wireless operator, whose efforts are generally frowned upon by government official as well as other individuals, should be encouraged; that the merest tinker may develop into an enthusiast and by proper study become a great radio engineer. The association plans to help young men in this field. Co-operation, coupled with direction of experimental work, is to be performed. Existing wireless clubs and organizations will be recognized and properly accredited officers may have a share in the councils of the national association.

Will Take in All.

Every amateur who is properly indorsed may join as an individual according to his abilities and geographical location he will be entered for eligibility in an existing club or association, published recognition of anything noteworthy he accomplished will be given and in due course admittance to an engineering body will be arranged. Progressive courses of study will be placed in each member's hands, experiments far removed from text book humdrum will be added and a monthly bulletin of new calls and other items included.

One arrangement that is being planned is this. Small clubs in their entirety or larger organizations divided into groups will be permitted to affiliate with some military organization as accredited members and officers of signal corps. Next summer these corps will enter military training camps similar to those recently held in the east. Thus a third line of defense will be available. The importance of this is emphasized by the fact that 1,100 men employed by the Marconi company were requisitioned by Great Britain for wireless service at the outbreak of the war.

Could Use Them in War Time.

It is pointed out that the United States in time of war would need hundreds of operators and these would be available. Among the distinguished men in the advisory board of the National Wireless association is Maj. William H. Elliott, a signal officer of wide experience and adjutant general of the Junior American guard, who will serve as military adviser.

Mr. Marconi will be president, and J. Andrew White, of the Marconi company, administrative officer. Mr. White is editor of the Wireless Age. Clayton E. Clayton, associated with Mr. White, will be managing secretary. Prof. Alfred N. Goldsmith, of the College of City of New York, an instructor in radio engineering, Prof. A. E. Kennelly, of Harvard, another radio expert, and Profs. Samuel Sheldon, of Polytechnic institute, Brooklyn, and Charles R. Cross, of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Prof. E. E. Bucher, instructing engineer of the Marconi company, also will act on the advisory board. To assist them will be a national council made up from existing city, state and interstate organizations.

Headquarters in New York.

The headquarters of the new organization will be at 450 Fourth avenue. It is to be strictly a co-operative body. Personal contact with national officers will be possible through conventions to be arranged. Educational plans include the distribution to charter members of three valuable radio volumes, one of which is "How to Pass United States Government Wireless License Examinations," giving question that have been asked by naval examiners. The volumes, it is felt, will help the amateur to higher engineering branches of radio communication.

"The association," said Mr. White yesterday, "represents the first movement for developing experimenters in an art which is of ever increasing importance to the world. The leading authorities in the country and the world's greatest expert in wireless communication have enthusiastically come to a heretofore unrecognized class of experimenters and offered to direct them in the acquisition of radio knowledge."

The Deadly Bayonet.

From the World's Work.

The bayonet has returned to its own as one of the most destructive of all weapons ever devised. Its thrust is deadlier than the cut of the sword or the blow of the axe or club. And the moral effect of it is incomparably greater. The defense against a blow is instinctive and effective—the arm upraised to break its impact. But there is no natural defense against the thrust, and, worse still, it comes sickeningly at the seat of human courage, the pit of the stomach. In euphemistic paraphrase of Private Mulvaney's vernacular, it takes diaphragm to stand a bayonet charge.

Eat Apples and Be Good.

From the Milwaukee Journal.

Solemnly enough the London Chronicle relates that a former governor of Millbank prison said that he "always had hopes of the final reformation of a prisoner, no matter how violent or depraved he might be, so long as he retained an appetite for apple pie."

Everybody has known for a long time that apples were good and good for people. What other morsel of the gods combines so truly and delicately the zephyrs of June, the gold of July, the fragrance of summer rains, the sharpness of early frost, the richness of the earth and the splendor of the heavens? What boy was ever worth counting who did not eat more apples than he ought? And what man, with the epicure's touch added to his boyish love, does not at the bottom of his heart recognize that to put apples between flaky crusts is to mingle nectar and ambrosia? Let the frost be never so thick on the pumpkin and the choppers grind their mincemeat never so fine—these are for occasions. But apple pie is for living.

But about apple pie and morals. We think that's fairly evident. It's not a cause, but a test. What it means is that no man who retains his affection for apple pie has lost his kinship with human nature. And no man who still shares common human feelings can be a monster, or wholly bad and past hope of saving.

THE SON OF HIS FATHER.

From the Chicago Herald.

Readers old enough to remember heard in Winston Churchill's speech in the British commons on Monday the once-familiar tones of his father "Fighting Randy" Churchill of the later '90s. There was the same refusal to apologize, there was the same plain speaking-out of convictions; there was the same disregard of certain polite and moth-eaten conventions of the British political game; there were sentences that went to the heart of the situation.

Whatever his defects of character or conduct, Winston Churchill is at least no dodger. Even with respect to the Antwerp expedition, though he had urged it earlier, and knew nothing of its undertaking when undertaken, he contended that it should not be regarded as wholly a misfortune. It had delayed the German advance, and without it one of the great battles would have been fought farther south than the Aisne.

As for the Dardanelles attempt, he glorified in it, and regretted only that it had not been pushed harder last summer, "with the utmost vigor, fury and sustained flow of re-enforcements," since an advance there would have "settled Turkey's fate, determined the attitude of the Balkans, cut off Germany from the east and saved Serbia." This was not prophesying after the fact. It is of record that Churchill "urged the government to do what it could in the west, but in any case to take Constantinople while time remains."

His remark that "the campaign of 1915 had been governed by the shortage of munitions, but that the campaign of 1916 ought to be decided against Germany by reason of the shortage of men," put in a sentence the theory of the "policy of wearing down" in which the allies' hope of success plainly lies. And his declaration that "we are the reserve of the allied cause and the time has come when that reserve must be thrown fully into the scale" defined the course of action that must be resolutely taken—unless Britons resign themselves to an ignominious peace.

From the height of political power Winston Churchill goes to join his regiment in Flanders. He may fall in the land where by "the bloody brook of Blenheim" or "the ditch at Malplaquet" his ancestor directed the storm of battles in which Englishmen died for England. But whether he fall or win fame as a soldier his place is secure as a man who neither feared to act nor to take responsibility of action, who like his father before him measured up in courage to all issues that challenged.

GODMOTHERS OF FRANCE ARE LOVED BY SOLDIERS

Paris, (by mail).—The godmothers' certificate (certificate de marraine) is the latest distinction originating in the great war. It was invented by the spasmodic publication entitled "The Echo of the Huts," a journal of the trenches and organ of the 31st territorials. It reads as follows:

"I, the undersigned, certify that Madame (or Mademoiselle) ..... has been my godmother during the war since. . .. ..191..

Signed... .. . .

The godmother may be a woman or a girl of any age, she has in some instances turned out to be a man. Her mission is to convey good cheer to some soldier at the front who has no family at home to look after him or who, through the vicissitudes of war, has been cut off from all communication with his relations. She writes to him and sends him such comforts as are practicable, and many that are not. She is generally French, of course but many English women and 100 Virginian girls are said to have their godsons in the French army and are sending them enough letters to keep all the interpreters busy.

What the "poilu" thinks of his godmother may be learned from the "Echo of the Huts." It says: "Their attentions are constant and full of delicacy. They provide their godsons with a litle well being, with a few luxuries that are not superfluous, and with some enchanting dreams that are not entirely useless either. As the soldiers of old combatted for their ladies, so the 'poilu' of today fights for his godmother. The godmother must be satisfied with her godson; in order that she be proud of him, that he be worthy of her, the 'poilu' performs heroic exploits.

"It cannot finish otherwise than in a contract in due and proper form. Therefore, to immortalize these patriotic unions, we have decided to create the 'godmother's certificate.'

"Later on it will not, perhaps, be the least moving of the souvenirs of this war."

Cost of Government.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

The administration calculates that the government should spend about $1,250,000,000 next year, or nearly double what it was spending 10 years ago—another notice that government steadily grows more expensive.

To govern the world before the great war probably cost $20,000,000,000 a year. The Statistical Abstract tabulates expenditures of 70 governments, whose subjects—numbering one billion six hundred and odd millions—virtually make up the world's population. Before the war these governments spent over $13,000,000 a year. But this does not include expenditures of American states, counties and cities, which must now run well toward $2,000,000,000 a year. It does not include expenditures of cities anywhere, nor of many other small political units. Quite likely the total would reach $20,000,000,000.

On a peace basis, the United States and Germany appear to be the most expensively governed countries in the world. Our total, when the new budget is adopted, will be with hailing distance of $3,000,00,000. Expenditures of the German empire, the German states and the colonies amounted to nearly $2,500,000,000. But the German states operate railroads, telephones and other public utilities, which swell both revenue and expenditure, whereas our expenditures are nearly all for government pure and simple—or impure and complicated, if you like it that way better. If we took our total at $3,000,000,000 and the world's total at $20,000,000,000—the latter, of course, being only the rudest sort of guess—it would cost one-sixth as much to govern 100,000,000 people in the United States as to govern 1,500,000,000 in the remainder of the world.

As to the national budget, the annoying feature is not its size, but the suspicion based on the opinion of those who speak with most authority, that it involves a great deal of waste. Everybody in the country, except the statesmen at Washington, would like to know how well grounded that suspicion is. It is easy to get the government to investigate everything else, but practically impossible to get it to investigate itself.

The Prime Requisite of a Soldier.

The very essence of a good soldier is physical condition. That as a nation we are individually not in such condition was very strikingly shown at the business men's encampment at Plattsburgh. This regiment was recruited largely from athletes—polo and football players, militiamen, big game hunters, and such people, probably far above the average of our citizens. They had a month's very vigorous training. And yet 10 miles was the utmost limit they could cover as a body on the march in one day. Yet the Thirtieth United States infantry, two days before the amateur war began, arrived at camp about 4:30 in the afternoon, the band playing "What the hell do we care," having covered 32 miles to a man since reveille.

The fastest of the English whippets can tear along over the ground at the rate of 17 yards a second.

NAPOLEON WOULD MOUNT ONLY GENTLEST OF NAGS

London, (by mail).—In connection with the accident to King George, who sustained severe injuries in a fall from his horse, the London papers recall the precautions that were taken lest Napoleon should appear at a disadvantage on horseback. The emperor was not a first class horseman, and his horses were always specially trained. Here is a description of the methods employed:

"They were trained to remain perfectly steady under tortures of every description; to receive blows about the head; drums were beat, pistols and fire crackers were fired in their ears, flags waved before their eyes, clumsy packages, and sometimes even sheep and pigs, were thrown between their legs. None were deemed sufficiently trained until the emperor could, without the least difficulty, pull them up short at full gallop, which was his favorite pace."

WOMEN CONTROL PURSE IN POCKET EDITION NATION

Zoe Beckley, in the New York Mail.

Being what his wife calls a "pickerup of unconsidered trifles," Lawrence Grant finds himself the rediscoverer of the smallest and least known republic on earth—Andorra, in the Pyrenees. Mr. Grant is an Englishman. He was an actor, and soon will be a lecturer. "Andorra lies exactly south of Arriege, between Spain and France," he says. "Its story is shrouded in mystery. But by laboriously translating some prehistoric documents I learn that in A. D. 805, Louis and Debonnaire gave the Andorrans a charter of independence for helping him in a fight with Spain.

"Andorra is one exquisitely beautiful valley about 16 miles in length. The one road to it is from Spain and over it you travel by mule. The road is fair, but highly undependable, on account of avalanches and landslides. You camp by the wayside at night, for instance, and the road ahead of you is entirely obliterated in the morning. If you are lucky enough to be left alive you and your mule make a detour and pick up the highway again.

"Some 12 tiny villages exist, scattered over six little counties, which, despite their pocket edition proportions, enjoy local option and a strong measure of freedom in every respect. The Andorrans even have a language of their own, a sort of Catalan, or mongrel Spanish.

"The Andorrans and their funny little country are full of quaint inconsistencies. They have thousands of head of cattle, yet butter, milk, cheese and cream are unheard of. They breed the animals entirely for the veal produced.

"There are no bakeshops, but they do have bootmakers and very good ones at that. They have no carts, but they have quite modern electric lights which they do not in the least understand, they've had people from Spain to install them. The power they get free from the rushing streams that tear through the valley. There are 20 miles of these wonderful trout streams—full of fish which nobody catches.

"With all Andorra's opportunities to be superlatively quaint, she has bungled her chances terribly. Her women, for instance, are the business people of the places. Ma and grandma are the purse holders. They attend to all financial deals except the veal trading, which must necessarily be conducted at a distance, wherever the market is—chiefly in Spain.

"Yet the Andorran woman would rather plow a mountain field set at an angle of 45 degrees than lift her voice in municipal affairs."

NOTHING SACRED ABOUT INTERSTATE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

From the Indianapolis News.

The Webb-Kenyon liquor law has been upheld by the Kansas supreme court. This is the first important ruling on the act since its passage, over President Taft's veto, in 1913. Two attacks have gone through federal channels to the United States supreme court, where they await decision. While the Kansas opinion will have no direct effect on the federal suits, the interpretation is of much general significance. The Webb-Kenyon act is entitled "an act divesting intoxicating liquors of their interstate character in certain cases." It provides that the shipment of intoxicating liquors from one state to another, "which * * * intoxicating liquor is intended by any person interested therein, to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used * * * in violation of any law of such state * * * is hereby prohibited." The case in Kansas was on appeal of the Missouri Pacific Railway company, which had been fined in a state district court for delivering intoxicating liquors within the state, in violation of the Mahin law requiring railroads to file explanatory statements. The Mahin law was regarded as coming within the purview of the Webb-Kenyon act.

It is understood that no appeals through state channels had previously been taken owing to the insignificant nature of the fines imposed. But the Missouri Pacific was fined $100 on each of 12 separate counts. In approving these fines, the Kansas supreme court had, of course, to take into account the national statute. Justice West, who wrote the opinion, held that "there is nothing more sacred about whisky intended for unlawful use than there is about diseased meat and lottery tickets, and, there, congress has the same power to prohibit interstate traffic in one as in the other." The two federal cases on which the determination of the constitutionality of the Webb-Kenyon act finally rests concern the Adams Express company, the American Express company, Whitley county, Kentucky, a distilling company in Cumberland, Md., and the state of West Virginia. The Adams Express company carried liquor into a "dry" Kentucky county and was fined. The American Express company refused to accept a liquor shipment billed to "dry" West Virginia, and the distilling company seeks an injunction compelling the express company to carry the goods. In the two federal cases mentioned, liquor manufacturers have argued the unconstitutionality of the law, while attorneys for the Anti-Saloon league and certain states have contended for its validity. The transportation lines are placed in an embarrassing position, being attacked if they decline to accept disputed shipments, and also if they transport the liquor. An early definite decision is, therefore, of importance. No fewer than a dozen states are now deeply concerned as to the status of the law.

War and Science.

From Science.

The Royal society is compiling a register of scientific and technical men in Great Britain and Ireland, who are willing to give their services in connection with the war. The register will be classified into subjects, and will ultimately constitute a large panel of men of standing, whose services will be available whenever any government department or similar authority requires specialist assistance. The register is being co-ordinated with those independently compiled by other societies and institutions, but the Royal society would be glad to have applications for forms from such members of the staffs of colleges and technical institutions as have not yet been registered by any society. The Royal society is also drawing up, with the co-operation of the principal societies and institutions, a list of scientific and technical men on active service in the army and na

NAVY'S BOTTLED UP, BUT GERMANY KEEPS ON BUILDING BATTLESHIPS

Launching German cruiser Hindenburg.

FOOD PROBLEM IN GERMANY SERIOUS

Speculation Partly to Blame For High Prices, Claim—Even Rabbit Crop Is Short—Berlin Without Lard.

Berlin (Special)—From every part of Germany come in increasing number complaints of the ever mounting cost of living—especially of eating—and coupled with them more and more frequently the charge that the middleman is to blame, and that speculation, not shortage of food, is responsible for jacking up prices to an unprecedented height.

Scarcely a day goes by but the food question is aired in at least one of the newspapers. The middleman refutes the charge that he is at fault quite as regularly as it is made, with the result, as the Tageblatt said, that the more earnestly the true explanation is sought, the more muddled becomes the whole subject.

Butter has been the latest commodity to go up. It had reached a three-mark-a-pound (75 cents) figure and was advancing daily when the authorities stepped in and anchored the price at 2 marks, 80 pfennigs, where it still remains. There is, further, a strong agitation for the government seizure of all butter, just as grain and other things have been seized and then dealt out equably and systematically. One reason for this agitation is seen in South Germany, where a physician reports that the largest creamery in his district is paying the farmers at the rate of 1 40 marks for 10 liters of milk that are necessary for one pound of butter and is selling the product wholesale at 2 30 in Saxony; consequently the creamery refused to sell any of its butter at home, but, for months, had been sending all it could make to the north. An additional profit came from the buttermilk.

Rabbit Crop Short.

October is the rabbit season in Germany, and it had been anticipated this year particularly, as the people were in need of this usually inexpensive, yet appetizing, food. When the season opened, however, it was found that rabbits were scarce, instead of plentiful, and were to be had only at prohibitive prices—ranging from 5.50 to 7 marks ($1 37 to $1.75). It was charged that the middlemen had been holding back the supply, with intent to increase the prices, but that charge is met by the assertion that the number of hunters this year is smaller than ever before and the number of rabbits shot is correspondingly smaller. Hence, by the law of supply and demand, prices have gone up. It is also pointed out that ammunition, guns and equipment for the hunt are dearer than ever.

The recent experience of a Berlin banker indicates that there may be some truth in the charges against the middlemen. He purchased a pullet in a Berlin game store at 3 75 marks a pound, his protest being met with the assertion that the farmer's country price was so high that it was impossible to retail the bird for less. Yet the next day he found he was able to buy a similar fowl in a suburb for 1 30. He took both birds to the chef of a big Berlin restaurant and was assured that in weight, quality and every other particular the two were identical.

Feel Meat Shortage.

In the mining country of western Germany the four largest associations of miners, numbering thousands of members, have felt it necessary to petition the imperial government to make it impossible for the well to do to buy up at prohibitive prices all the available meats and fats. Their petition reads:

"Lately the quantity of meat and fats offered for sale so far as the great mass of the poorer people is concerned, has greatly decreased. Partly the war is responsible, but it is plain also that the food is being withheld for speculative purposes.

"With the decreasing quantity offered, prices for the foods has risen enormously. The poorer part of the population can no longer allow themselves the enjoyment of meat at all. If the unfavorable developments are not soon checked, they will not be able to have fats either. That portion of the population which is financially better off is buying up all available meat and fat at any price, because it is unwilling to do without them.

"Such a development is bound to have the most unfavorable consequences for our people and our economics. Man needs a certain amount of fat for his nourishment. Especially for that portion of the people which does heavy physical labor is fat indispensable for replacing expended physical strength, in order that, on the one hand, its health may be maintained and, on the other, that it may be kept in condition to do its work continuously. The workers are especially keyed up in a way during the war that makes powerful nourishment imperative. Especially is this the case with miners. A minimum of them must do the utmost possible work. If complete nourishment is not afforded them the work must suffer. Without it, it is inevitable that the workers will break down, and that their families' health will suffer permanently. This damage must be avoided.

"We ask, therefore, that necessary measures be taken, in order that the supplies of meat and fat which are at hand shall not be used up to too great an extent by the upper and wealthier classes, who work far less than the miners, and that the necessary quantities of such foods shall be made available for the poorer, hard laboring portion of the population so as to maintain their working strength.

"The proposed measures announced by the imperial government for supplying cheap potatoes removes the necessity of going into that subject now. We wish, nevertheless, to express the urgent wish that the supplying may begin as soon as possible and at low prices."

The petition is signed by representatives of the "Organization of Miners of Germany," the "Trade Union of Christian Miners of Germany," the "Polish Workers' Association, Miners' Division," and the "Trade Union of Miners H-D."

The visible supply of lard, in Berlin at least, has become so small that the magistrate has forbidden its further sale to the general public, and has directed that it is to be distributed to worthy poor families, those of soldiers preferred. The National Woman's association is to take charge of all available lard and have control over its distribution.

AUTOMOBILE LIFE AT BIG FOOTBALL GAME

From the Newark News.

All morning the cars pour into little old Nassau street, and by noon the safest way for a pedestrian to cross from Gulick's to the campus is by areoplane. The university has provided spaces near the stadium for 3,200 cars, but most drivers still prefer the private parking places near the main street. In one day the humble householder of Princeton can make enough money out of his dooryard to pay his rent for a couple of months. Even some of the churches open their lawns for the occasion. The grounds around the club houses are packed solid with the cars of graduate members. Every vacant lot in town is used as standing room for automobiles except the lot where the game is played. The good old perfume of chrysanthemums is missed. The flowers are there by thousands, and they may be as fragrant as ever; but the characteristic smell of a big football match in this day and age is gasoline.

Sitting comfortably in a parked car, it is pleasant to eat a shoe-box lunch and watch the late comers. Out in the road the owner of the premises waves to the throng and points to his driveway. A big car turns in, a woman at the helm. She can't twist the wheel quickly enough. Crack! goes a fence post. "And they want the vote!" remarks a stout young man in the car next to yours. He is one of a hilarious stag party; you are sorry to see a bottle going around. On the road home you will see that same crowd partly in a ditch and partly in a wire fence, and you will remark, "And they have the vote!" This particular young man is now taking a guying from his companions; it appears that he was to provide fruit for the lunch, and he has brought six sickly looking bananas.

Around are other luncheon parties. Some of them have spread blankets on the ground and are taking refreshment picnic fashion. There are crimson catching flags and orange pennants everywhere. Whisk brooms are busy, for the roads of middle Jersey are famously dusty. A millionaire is trying to open a sardine can with a pocket knife; he is getting oil on his leopard skin overcoat, and his lady wife is jawing him—just as if he couldn't afford a new leopard skin coat. Thermos bottles gleam in the sunlight, and there is a vocal demand for more of those chicken sandwiches. It is all very picturesque and agreeable.

But after the game. Four thousand automobiles with but a single thought, 4,000 engines that beat as one. The songs of alma mater are forgotten in the feverish rush for home, sweet home. It is more than an exodus; it is a regular Leviticus.

What a scramble. What a fog of smoke. What shrieking of klaxons. What heroic deeds are done by the local and the Trenton police, compared with which the performances of the gridiron men were child's play.

Chopin's Heart In Moscow.

From the London Chronicle.

Before the Russians left Warsaw they sent away from that city its most precious relic, the heart of Chopin, which had been kept in a casket in the church of the Holy Cross there since 1849. It is now in a place of safety at Moscow. Shelley's heart was also preserved in a casket. When the poet was drowned off Leghorn in 1822, his body was cremated by Byron, Leigh Hunt and Trelawney, and his heart was rescued from the flames by the last named. When King Robert Bruce of Scotland died in 1329, his heart, too, was preserved in a casket. It was given to his friend, Sir James Douglas, to be buried in Jerusalem. On his way out of Palestine, Sir James Douglas fell, fighting against the Moors in Spain, and as he fell he threw the precious relic before him in the battlefield, crying out. "Now pass onward as thou wert wont, and Douglas will follow thee or die." The heart was found next day by Sir Simon Leigh, who brought it back to Scotland, where it was buried in the monastery of Melrose.

"You made good time," I said

"Yes, sir. I was fortunate in catch- ing an express and not having to wait for the trolley"

"We'd better go into the house" I added. "I have a message for you — a confidential message"

He glanced at me quickly, but fol- lowed silently, as I led the way into Godfrey's study and carefully closed the door.

"Sit down," I said and I sat dow myself and looked at him

I had always thought Swain a handsome, thoroughbred looking fel- low, and I saw th t in the past few months, he had grown more thor- oughbred looking than ever His face was thinner than when he had first gone to work for us there was a new line between his eyebrows and the set of his lips told of battles fought and won A year ago, it had seemed natural to call him Freddie but no one would think of doing so now His father's creditors had not attempted to take from him his wardrobe—a costly and extensive one—so that he was dressed as carefully, if not quite as fashionably, as ever, in a way that suggested a young millionaire, rather than a $15-a- week clerk At this moment, his face was clouded, and he drummed the arm of his chair with nervous fingers. Then he shifted uneasily under my gaze, which was, perhaps, more earnest than I realized

"You said you had a message for me, sir," he reminded me

"Yes," I said. "Have you ever been out this way before"

"Yes, I have been out this way a number of times."

"You know this place, then"

"I have heard it mentioned, but I have never been here before"

"Do you know whose place that is next door to us?"

'Yes," and his voice sank to a lower key. "It belongs to Wortington Vaughan."

"And you know him"

"At one time I knew him quite well, sir" and his voice was still lower

"No doubt." I went on, more and more interested. 'you also knew his very fascinating daughter"

A wave of color crimsoned his face. "Why are you asking me these ques- tions, Mr Lester"" he demanded.

"Because ' I said, "the message I have is from that young lady, and is for a man named Frederic Swain."

He was on his feet, staring at me, and all the blood was gone from his cheeks.

"A message' ' he cried. From her' From Marjorie' What is it, Mr Les- ter? For God's sake "

"Here it is," I said, and handed him the letter.

He seized it, took one look at the ad- dress, then turned away to the win- dow and ripped the envelope open He unfolded the sheet of paper it con- tained, and as his eyes ran along it, his face grew whiter still At last he raised his eyes and stared at me with the look of a man who felt the world tottering about him

CHAPTER V

A CALL FOR HELP

"For heaven's sake, Swain," I said, "sit down and pull yourself together"

But he did not seem to hear me In- stead he read the letter through again, then he turned toward me.

"How did you get this, Mr Lester" he asked.

"I found it lying under the trees. It had been thrown over the wall"

"But how did you know it was thrown over by Miss Vaughan"

"That was an easy guess," I said, sparring feebly 'Who else would at- tempt to conduct a surreptitious cor- respondence with a handsome young man"

But he did not smile the look of in- tensity in his eyes deepened

"Come, Mr Lester," he protested, "don't play with me. I have a right to know the truth"

"What right" I queried

He paused an instant, as though nerving himself to speak, as though asking himself how much he should tell me. Then he came toward me impulsively

"Miss Vaughan and I are engaged to be married," he said "Some persons may tell you that the engagement has been broken off, more than once, I have offered to release her, but she re- fuses to be released We love each oth- er."

The word "love" is a difficult one for us Anglo-Saxons to pronounce, the voice in which Swain uttered it brought me to my feet with out- stretched hand.

"If there's anything I can do for you, my boy," I said, "tell me."

"Thank you, Mr Lester," and he re- turned my clasp. "You have done a great deal already in giving me this letter so promptly. The only other thing you can do is to permit me to stay here until tonight."

"Until tonight?"

"Miss Vaughan asks me to meet her tonight."

"In her father's grounds"

"Yes."

"Unknown to him"

"Yes."

"He is not friendly to you""

"No."

I had a little struggle with myself. "See here, Swain," I said, "sit down and let us talk this thing over calmly. Before I promise anything, I should like to know more or the story. From the glimpse I caught of Miss Vaughan, I could see that she is very beautiful, and she also seemed to me to be very young."

"She is 19," said Swain.

"Her father is wealthy, I suppose.""

"Very wealthy."

"And her mother is dead"

"Yes."

"Well," I began, and hesitated, fear- ing to wound him.

"I know what you are thinking," Swain burst in, "and I do not blame you. You are thinking that she is a young beautiful, and wealthy girl, while I am a poverty stricken nonen- tity, without any profession, and able to earn just enough to live on—per- haps I couldn't do even that, if I had to buy my clothes' You are thinking that her father is right to separate us, and that she ought to be protected from me. Isn't that it""

"Yes," I admitted, 'something like that"

"And I answer Mr Lester, by saying that all that is true, that I am not worthy of her and that nobody knows it better than I do. There are thous- ands of men who could offer her far more than I can, and who would be eager to offer it. But when I asked her to marry me, I though myself the son of a wealthy man. When I found myself a pauper, I wrote at once to re- lease her. She replied that when she wished her realese, she would ask for it; that it wasn't my money she was in love with. Then I came out here and had a talk with her father. He was kind enough, but pointed out that the affair could not go farther until I had established myself. I agreed, of course. I agreed, too, when he sug- gested that it would only be fair to her to leave her free—not to see her or write to her, or try to influence her in any way I wanted to be fair to her Since then I have not seen her, nor heard from her But her father's feel- ings have changed toward me"

'In what way?"

"I thought he might be interested to know what I was doing, and two or three months ago, I called and asked to see him. Instead of seeing me, he sent word by a black faced fellow in a white robe that neither he nor his daughter wished to see me again."

His face was red with the remem- bered humiliation

'I wrote to Miss Vaughan once, after that," he added, "but my letter was not answered"

"Evidently she didn't get your let- ter"

'Why do you think so?"

"If she had got it, she would have known that you were no longer at 1010 Fifth avenue Her father, no doubt, kept it from her"

He flushed still more deeply and started to say something, but I held him silent

He was justified in keeping it,' I said You had promised not to write to her And I don't see that you have given me any reason why I should as- sist you against him."

I haven't' Swain admitted more calmly, "and under ordinary circum- stances my self respect would com- pel me to keep away I am not a fortune hunter, but I can't keep away, I can't stand on my dignity. When she calls for aid, I must go to her, not for my own sake but for hers, because she needs to be protected from her father far more than from me."

"What do you mean by that?" I de- manded.

Mr Lester ' he said, leaning for- ward in his chair and speaking in a lowered voice and with great earnest- ness, "her father is mad—I am sure of it No one but a madman would live and dress as he does, no one but a madman would devote his whole time to the study of the supernatural, no one but a madman would believe in the supernatural as he does."

But I shook my head.

'I'm afraid that won't do, Swain. A good many fairly sane people believe in the supernatural and devote them- selves to its study—there is William James, for instance"

'But William James doesn t dress in flowing robes, and worship the sun, and live with a Hindu mystic."

'No," I smiled, "he doesn t do that," and I thought again of the mysterious light and of the two white clad figures. "Does he live with a 'Hindu mystic?"

"Yes," said Swai bitterly "An adept, or whatever they call it. He's the fellow who locked me out."

'Does he speak English?"

"Better than I do. He seems a finely educated man"

"Is he a lunatic, too?"

Swain hesitated

"I don't know," he said, finally "I only saw him once, and I was certain- ly impressed—I wasn't one, two, three with him. I suppose mysticism comes more or less natural to a Hindu; but I'm convinced that Mr. Vaughan has softening of the brain

How old is he?"

'About 60"

'Has he always been queer?"

"He has always been in- terested in telepathy and mental suggestion, and all that sort of thing But before his wife's death he was fairly normal It was her death that started him on this su- pernatural business. He hasn't thought of anything else since"

"Are there any relatives who could be asked to interfere?"

'None that I know of"

I thought over what he had told me.

"Well, I said at last, "I can see no harm in your meeting Miss Vaughan and finding out what the condition of affairs really is. If her father is really mad, he may be a good deal worse now than he was when you saw him last It would, of course, be possible to have his sanity tested—but his daughter would scarcely wish to do that."

"No, of course not," Swain agreed. "Her letter tells you nothing?"

'Nothing except that she is in great trouble, and wishes to see me at once.'

"You are to go to the house?"

"No there is an arbor in one corner of the grounds. She says that she will be there at 11 30 every night for three nights. After that she says it will be no use for me to come—that it will be too late."

"What does she mean by too late?" "

Do We Want a Tariff Commission?

From Collier's.

The present argument for scientific administration of tariff laws is based on sound logic, it should be based also on clear thinking The most obvious general purpose of a scientific tariff policy is to preserve a balance of advantage for one's own country by shifting import taxes as conditions change.

It should be noted that this method meets only part of the problem A manu- facturer is not helped much if foreign control of raw material prices outweighs his protection Germany has aided her manufacturers by careful attention to just this factor, and probably any tariff com- mission we may have must, sooner or lat- er take hold of the question of export duties. This mean an amendment to the federal constitution

Import and export duties are only two methods of affecting the prices of manu- factured articles. Ocean and railway freights are also of great importance, and an effective commission would have to work in close harmony with an Interstate Commerce commission of enlarged pow- ers and with a great statistical bureau devoted to gathering current trade facts.

This sounds like a large order, but it is only a brief list of the essential imple- ments. The important changes would be in the centralization of our government and in the much closer working relations between government and business. The success of Germany's tariff machinery has been largely due to team work between the great commercial associations and government officials. It is impossible for anyone to become an industrial multimil- lionaire in modern Germany without be- coming the kaiser's friend. Scientific tar- iff is not an abstraction, but the practical employment in every day affairs of the nation's power for the nation's economic gain. It has its shoddy side in class in- trigue and selfishness, but the method will be more and more used in the trade rival- ries of the next few years.

Field maneuvers recently held in Massachusetts were marked by experi- ments by the signal corps in maintain- ing a wireless aerial at a great altitude by means of kites. A string of kites was sent up to a hight of 1,600 feet, the messages sent from the aerial sup- ported by the kites being stated to have been received 150 miles away. The field wireless set used by the corps would under ordinary circumstances only send messages 25 miles. The re- ceiving qualities of the kite supported aerial are stated to have been notable

GERMANIZED CITY IS BECOMING JAPANESE

Chinese Port of Tsing-Tao Is Rapidly Losing Character of Teuton Builders.

Tsing Tao (by mail.)—Few traces remain of the long siege which robbed the Germans of this model city and turned it into Japanese hands. By means of aeroplane scouts the Japanese were able to direct the fire of their big guns against the forts of the heights surrounding Tsing-tao so accurately that little damage was done to any- thing but the military strongholds. A few stray shells landed in the city. Pieces of shell did slight damage to the American consulate. The Brazilian consulate was wrecked. A corner was knocked off the Prinz Heinrich hotel, a pretentious building on the water front. But all damaged walls have been repaired and the beautiful city which the Germans carved out of the granite hills facing Kio-Chow bay is moving along peacefully, little changed except- ing that Japanese have replaced Ger- mans.

Instead of 3,500 Europeans who lived in Tsing-tao previous to the siege, 12,500 Japanese have settled here. Many of these have opened up shops and taken over business which the Ger- mans conducted The Japanese gov- ernment discouraged this rush to Tsing-tao, which was overdone to the extent that many of the new shops have had to close.

'Military necessity," has enabled Japanese officials to take over many private institutions as well as the pub- lish buildings. Lieutenant Colonel Yoshimura, the military governor, oc- cupies the handsome stone structure formerly used by Colonel Waldeck, the German governor of the concession, who is now a prisoner in Japan. This imposing building surmounts a high knoll in the heart of the European sec- tion of the city and the great white flag with the red moon in it which floats from the lefty tower is the first thing which meets the eye of a visitor entering Tsing-tao on the railway manned by Japanese.

A Japanese garrison of one battalion occupies the barracks on the hights overlooking the city. Japanese soldiers police the city and two regiments of Japanese are scattered along the 246 miles of railway built by the Germans to connect their seaport with the rail- way system which touches Peking, Tien-tsin and Shanghai and connects those centers with the Yang-tsekiang and other great rivers penetrating the interior of China.

General Ohtani commands the Jap- anese forces in Tsing-tao and along the Shangtung railway. Baron Funa- koshi, who was attached to the Japan- ese embassy at Berlin before the war, but left that city previous to Japan's declaration of hostilities, is in charge of what the Japanese call a "diplomatic bureau," an organization designed to look after claims and international questions growing out of the war con- ditions. The American consul, M. R. Peck, returned to Tsing-tao immedi- ately after the siege and is looking after the interests of Americans and belligerents in a semi-official way. He has no official standing and is in much the same position as American consuls in Belgium. To apply for official recognition from the Japanese would imply admission by the United States of Japan's sovereignty in Tsing-tao and the entire Kiao-Chow concession held by Germany; 'This comprises an area of many square miles along Kiao- Chow bay in addition to the city of Tsing-tao proper, but does not include the town of Kiao-Chow, which is fre- quently confused with the concession bearing the same name.

Rumors are in circulation in Tsing- tao that the Japanese will soon estab- lish a civil government in the conces- sion, but no official announcement has been made. Japan has turned the customs over to China, under Japanese supervision, retaining 20 per cent of the receipts for operating, purposes Broadly speaking, Japan now stands just where Germany did before the war in relation to the concession. Japan has substituted its name for Germany throughout the treaty agreement be- tween China and Germany, granting the Germans the 99-year lease on the seaport territory and the right to build railways in Shantung province.

Saloniki, (by mail) —The valley of the Pek, in northern Serbia, which the Germans occupied early in their Serbian campaig say one day rank with the Klondike ; most Serbians believe that it is rich in gold. Though the main deposits have never been lo- cated, the peasantry for generations have made a slender income for pan- nings of wash gold, coming, it is be- lieved, from a rich quartz reef far up in the hills

The total output of gold from the smaller placer workings has averaged about $15,000 a year for several gen- erations. Occasional nuggets of con- siderable size have been found, and there is evidence that the Romans drew gold supplies from this region.

History That Is Not Taught.

From the World's Work.

In the war of 1812, although we had nearly 10 times as many men under arms at one time or another as those opposed to us, we achieved only one success on land and that was after the war had closed—and we had the hu- miliation of seeing the capital burned by a small invading force.

In the Mexican war our forces were successful, but more because of the enemy's weakness than of our strength. Few enemies would allow a little army in hostile territory to await reinforce- ments unmolested, as General Scott was allowed to do at Puebla; or per- mit us to train our troops as General Taylor for eight months trained the volunteers who won the battle of Buena Vista.

General Upton, in his "Military Pol- icy of the United States," says that the failure to subdue the rebellion in 1861 was due to "our total want of military organization and preparation." In his opinion "the last three costly and bloody years of the civil war were needless." And General Upton's deduc- tions were approved by no less an au- thority than General Sherman.

Canada's Fervid Loyalty.

From the Buffalo Times.

King George asked for more recruits. Canada responds with the promise of 100,- 000 more. So far the Dominion has sent across the water 101,500 men. It has under training and on guard duty, in Canada 71,- 500. That makes 173,000 men that Canada has taken from peaceful pursuits and made into soldiers for the defense of the empire. And it is prepared to train and outfit 100,000 more of her young men. Sure- ly the Dominion is proving its loyalty with a fervor which should win it grateful rec- ognition as a important part of the great empire.

SUDDEN DEATH

Caused by Disease of the Kidneys

The close connection which exists between the heart and the kidneys is well known nowadays. As soon as kidneys are diseased, arterial tension is increased and the heart functions are attacked. When the kidneys no longer pour forth waste, uremic poi- soning occurs, and the person dies and the cause is often given as heart dis- ease, or disease of brain or lungs.

It is a good insurance against such a risk to send 10 cents for a large trial package of "Anuric"—the latest dis- covery of Dr. Pierce. Also send a sample of your water This will be examined without charge by expert chemists at Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Ho- tel, Buffalo, N. Y. When you suffer from backache, frequent or scanty urine, rheumatic pains here or there, or that constant tired, worn-out feel- ing, it's time to write Dr. Pierce, de- scribe your symptoms and get his medical opinion, without charge—ab- solutely free This "Anuric" of Dr. Pierce's is 37 times more active than lithia, for it dissolves uric acid in the system, as hot water does sugar.

Simply ask for Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets. There can be no imitation. Every package of "Anuric" is sure to be Dr. Pierce's. You will find the sig- nature on the package just as you do on Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, the ever-famous friend to ailing women.

Worry is a frequent cause and sometimes a symptom of kidney dis- ease. Thousands have testified to im- mediate relief from these symptoms after using Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets for the kidneys and backache.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong, sick women well. No alcohol. Sold in tablets or liquid.

Don't Shiver in Chilly Rooms

The discomfort of spending the early days of fall in chilly, unheated rooms is nothing to the danger to health.

It lowers the vitality and invites colds and pneumonia; if there are young chil- dren or old people in the family the risk of illness is doubled. It also is unneces- sary, when the NEW PERFECTION Heater instantly banishes frosty chill and makes the liv- ing room a place of genial comfort.

Carry it with you from room to room and have heat to dress by in the morning and in the bathroom. After the winter fires are lighted, use the NEW PERFEC- TION in rooms that are hard to heat; in the night, if anyone is sick; wherever and whenever you want a warm room quickly —by simply striking a match.

The NEW PERFECTION is easy to care for. Burns 10 hours on one gallon of oil. Can't smoke. No trouble to re-wick, because wick and carrier are combined— the fresh wick all ready to put in, clean, smooth and ready to light.

For best results use Perfection Oil.

What To Look For in Buying A Piano.

Remember a piano is first of all, a musical instrument, not merely a piece of furniture. It must have the musical qualities as well as beauty of design and finish. Decide first on Tone, Action and Durabilitp—select design and finish afterward.

WELTY PIANOS are built for lasting musical quality. Perfection of tone is the reason for every part, every bit of workmanship, every careful refinement in construction The very purity and strength of tone show superior quality. It does not take a trained musician to appreciate the tone of the Welty Piano. All music lovers recognize its beauty. The action transmits the touch of the fingers to the strings. It must respond accurately to every variation. To show sensitiveness of action, try getting a soft tone by a very light touch with the "loud" pedal on; then loud crashes to show its strength and wide range of possibilities. Try quick repetitions on the same keys to test the elasticity. These tests show the superiority of the Welty action.

Ramember you run no risk by buying from us. We have done a successful business among you for over 23 years. Our guarantee is faithfully kept. Our instruments give entire satisfaction for a life-time. We invite your personal inspection of these instruments, feeling assured you will be convinced that they are greater bargains in High Grade Pianos and Players than can be purchased elsewhere.

THE KLEMME TIMES

M. M. MAGNER, Publisher.

KLEMME, IOWA

An American manufacturer of cameras has designed and is introducing a camera made especially for the purpose of making a record of the readings of meter dials. In order to obtain a reading with this photographic recorder, it is only necessary to place the camera opening against the meter dial and press a lever, which automatically opens the shutter as well as switches on four small battery operated lamps that illuminate the meter dials. The exposures are made on a film consisting of opaque paper coated with an emulsion. The side of the paper next to the emulsion is white, so that the developed film clearly shows the meter readings in reverse order. The film is then placed on a special rool stand that is provided with a mirror so that the meter dials will appear in their proper order. By means of this camera it is possible for an electric light company to possess photographic evidence of the meter readings of all its customers, and it is expected that this will be the means of avoiding many disputes with patrons about the consumption of current and gas.

In order to take motion pictures at night, amid country scenes far removed from electric power lines, a leading American photoplay producer has fitted up a fair sized power plant on a big motor truck. The portable lighting equipment includes a number of projection lamps which may be connected to the power plant by 2,000-foot cables. This permits the projection lamps to be taken into caves, ravines or other inaccessible places that may be found suitable as backgrounds for the photoplays. A 13-inch navy type searchlight is one of the features of the portable lighting plant. It is so mounted at the side of the driver's seat that its rays of light may be played in any direction. If need be, this searchlight may be employed to illuminate motion picture settings in conjunction with the other lamps. Current for the lamps and searchlight is supplied by a generator which is driven by the motor truck engine. The entire portable plant outfit weighs approximately four tons.

England is producing 60,000 pairs of boots for soldiers' wear every day—more than could have been produced in a week before the war. An order for 500,000 pairs for Serbia is in hand, in addition to a French order, while Italy also is said to be in the market for army footwear Underwear, gloves and other articles, made by Japanese manufacturers, soon will be seen in London shops, to take the place of certain German specialties A firm of London warehousemen sent a special representative to the chief textile manufacturing centers of Japan with power to buy on a large scale in time for the winter season The goods, it is said, compare favorably as regards quality, appearance and price with anything produced by the Germans

A novelty for British Columbia sportsmen this season is the appearance of large numbers of American quail in several localities in the province. Previous efforts to introduce this species of game bird in the Canadian Pacific coast country have failed, and the bevies reported this year are said to have migrated from the south or their own accord, and in some places they are reported quite plentiful. The birds came into the province for the first time last season There were only six pairs, and they are supposed to have migrated from the flocks which the United States government has been breeding in the state of Washington As a result of breeding and by additional migrations the covies have multiplied rapidly

The mission settlement at Mt Hope, 100 miles north of the arctic circle, in Alaska, is contemplating the installation of an electric lighting plant to be driven by large windmills. During the long arctic winter the steady winds in that region seldom fall below 20 miles an hour, which is ample for driving the power plant Since fuel of any kind is exceedingly expensive in that region, the power will serve the dual purpose of illuminating and heating

A Seattle superior court judge who seems to think there is wisdom in really doing something, has ordered a questionable hotel closed for six months and decreed that the expensive furnishings be torn out and sold by the state. Besides this he has exacted a fine of $300 from the owner, a woman, who stoutly maintained ignorance of the use to which her property was being put

Experiments conducted by the New York commission on ventilation, demonstrate that as long as the temperature is kept down the vitiated air of an unventilated room where the humidity is kept constant has no direct effects on the pulse, blood pressure, body temperature, respiration or metabolism, though the desire for food is apparently diminished

A New York inventor has obtained a patent on a device designed to discourage hens from the not always laudable of desirable ambition to sit It consists of several hollow nest eggs joined in series by connecting tubes so arranged that cold water can be kept circulating through the eggs

Butter is being sold in Leeds, England, at 47 cents a pound and in consequence many people are turning to margarine at 20 to 25 cents a pound People in the middle classes, as well as in the laboring classes, are now learning to use it.

The first case of yellow fever in the Panama canal zone in nearly eight years resulted recently in the death at Ancon hospital of a young Kansas engineer named Munday. He had contracted the disease while mining in Colombia.

CUMMINS DOES NOT FAVOR POLICE DUTY FOR GUARD MEMBERS

Adjutant General Says Wrong Idea Is Outlined in Press Report on Plans.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 4.—Adj. Gen. Guy E. Logan yesterday objected to news dispatches printed in several Iowa newspapers quoting Senator Cummins as favoring that the militia continue to do police duty. He declared that the senator wishes to relieve the national guard entirely of police duty.

"We had a conference with Senator Cummins a few days before he left for Washington," said Adjutant General Logan. "At that time he told us emphatically that he is opposed to the militia doing police duty. The dispatches must have become tangled in coming over the wires from Washington, for the senator surely was misquoted in some of the newspapers."

Senator Cummins has prepared a bill to be filed in congress which will provide for the enlargement of the national guard. The measure will also provide for six military schools, one of which is to be located at Fort Des Moines, if plans materailize

In addition to the changes in the guard organization, military men want the militia relieved of police duty While Iowa has had no trouble between the militia and striking workmen, there have been frequent riots and clashes between union men and the militia in other states so that some bitter feeling exists between the two. If the national guard were to be considered a part of the regular army and not be subject to call for police duty, a better feeling would exist with reference to the armed force according to those favoring the increase in the militia.

Senator Cummins also will introduce a measure in congress to amend the constitution to provide that the national guard may be ordered outside of the country for duty in case of war, according to statements made here. The militiamen are asking that this be done, it is said

SUIT AND COUNTER SUIT OVER RESTAURANT MEAL

Shenandoah, Ia., Dec. 4.—A counter claim for slander has been filed by the proprietors of the Elk cafe against M. E. Beach, councilman from the Third ward, who is suing the cafe management for $1,000, alleging he was put out of the place The trouble, it is alleged, grew out of a dispute over extending credit and punching the price of a cigar on a meal ticket The case is set to come to trial in this term of the superior court.

Mr. Beach is on a trade trip for the American Live Stock Powder company, of which he is vice president, and is traveling in California and the Hawaiian islands.

CONTEST DROPPED AGAINST ESTATE OF DENNIS HESSIAN

Humboldt, Ia., Dec 4 —The will of the late Dennis Hessian, of this city, involving an estate estimated around $150,000 and over which a contest was expected, was admitted to probate this week without protest

The contestants decided there was not enough evidence to warrant a fight. The greater returns of the estate are to be used, if necessary, for the testator's brother, Jack, during his life, when the bulk then remaining goes to the Catholic society here.

EXPRESSMEN HAVE NARROW ESCAPE IN BURNING CAR

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Dec 4.—Trapped in a burning express car, Express Messenger C. H. Bronson and his assistant, F. W. Howe, both of Chicago, narrowly escaped incineration when an explosion occurred which immediately threw the interior of the car into blaze.

They were on Milwaukee train No. 17, and had just left Paralta for Marion when the accident happened. The flames cut off the air valve, so they could not stop the train. Feeling their way through dense smoke to side doors which had been blown out by the explosion, they hung to iron safety ladders until Conductor C H Westcott brought the train to a stop.

Two safes in the car contained over $30,000 in currency besides other valuables, but nothing was lost. The car will be a total loss The men were brought here and placed in St Luke's hospital, both badly burned

FOUR FAINTERS FURNISH FIRST AID PRACTICE

Iowa City, Ia., Dec. 4 —Circumstances marked the "First Aid to the Injured" lecture of Dr. Zella White Stewart to the freshment girls at Iowa university. While she was delivering her address, giving the coeds advice as to serving those in danger, four of her girl auditors fainted in rapid succession. Immediately the instructions of the educator were carried into practical effect. All the swooning young women were soon resuscitated.

ONAWA—The Onawa schools have recently inaugurated a system of medical inspection of pupils. Four of the local physicians have volunteered their services until all the pupils have been examined. The examinations cover the eye, ear, nose, throat, tonsils, adenoids, teeth, skin, and general condition. The idea is being favorably received, only one objection being made to Superintendent Leon O. Smith so far Over 300 pupils have been examined

DENISON—The Federal Mutual Insurance company, of Des Moines, has made a settlement with its policy holders in Crawford county on a basis of a 2 per cent assessment. The policy holders claimed they had an agreement that the assessment should not exceed $15 per $1,000 per year The call was made for $27. Some of the policy holders still expect to fight the company.

MANSON—The Wise restaurant was totally destroyed by fire Thursday morning.

SALOON CLOSING LAW IS BULLET PROOF, COSSON SAYS

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 3.—Attorney General Cosson reports that certain saloon men of Iowa are going to test the validity of the mulct law repeal. One or two saloonkeepers, it is reported, will refuse to close their doors at midnight, December 31, and will seek an injunction to prevent the officers from closing them. The suit probably will be instituted either at Davenport or Dubuque, it is reported. The saloon men will attack the repeal on a half dozen different grounds, but the attorney general declares it is "bullet proof."

THREE OFFICIALS OF HARDIN COUNTY HELD ON CRIMINAL CHARGE

Indictments Relate to Alleged Misuse of County's Bridge and Road Funds.

Eldora, Ia., Dec. 4.—Indictments were returned by the Hardin county grand jury against two former county supervisors and the former county engineer. The indictments grow out of alleged mishandling of bridge funds and accounts.

Two indictments charging conspiracy were found against former Supervisors Charles L. Marks and N. L. Webster and against former Engineer S. B. Gardner. A third indictment charging false pretenses was found against Gardner.

The bonds of Marks and Webster were fixed at $7,000 each and that of Gardner at $10,000. All gave bond.

The cases against the former officials began in August, 1914, when investigation led to charges of false pretense against Gardner. This charge was not sustained at his trial. The removal of Marks was requested by Attorney General Cosson some time later and Marks voluntarily resigned.

State Accountant Hunt, of Des Moines, investigated the case here and made a statement that Gardner owed Hardin county something like $6,000 Suit to recover that amount has been filed against him.

IDA GROVE LETS CONTRACT FOR 65,000 YARDS OF PAVING

Ida Grove, Ia., Dec 4 —The city council at a meeting Tuesday night let the contract to an Omaha company for 65,000 square yards of sheet asphalt paving in the streets and alleys of Ida Grove during the year 1916. There were 10 bids filed with the clerk and representatives of all the firms were present at the meeting. The council has issued an order that all sewer connections and water taps must be made this fall, as the work will be started next spring as soon as the weather will permit

GIRL BOUND TO TABLE BY TRAMP WHO ASKED FOOD

Algona, Ia. Dec. 4 —The 15-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Stumbo was attacked by a tramp. The girl's parents were away at the time. The tramp came to the door of the Stumbo home, one mile west of here, and asked for something to eat. He was informed by the girl that her parents were away and that she could not give him any food.

The tramp forced his way into the house, caught the girl and bound her to a table, gagging her with a handkerchief She was still in that position when her parents returned home.

Scores of infuriated citizens joined in the search for the man, but he could not be found

MINNESOTA TO HAVE CUMMINS ORGANIZATION

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 4.—Senator A B. Cummins will soon be put before the republican voters of Minnesota by a solidly organized Cummins association, built up to work as the Iowa Cummins association is working The organization in Minnesota was definitely started yesterday, according to advices received by Charles A Rawson, who returned yesterday morning from several days in Minneapolis and St. Paul Mr Rawson was accompanied by L. G Kurtz and Howard J Clark

For the present the names of the leaders in the Cummins movement in Minnesota cannot be divulged, according to the Iowa scouts, as they wish to make their own announcements in their own state before information comes back to the voters there from outside

YOUNG MAN'S SUICIDE DUE TO DISAPPOINTMENT IN LOVE

Council Bluffs, Ia., Dec. 4 —Clyde Bates, aged 25, who has been managing the farm of Mrs. John Taylor near Oakland, for several years making his home with the family, committed suicide in his room by shooting himself in the temple.

Young Bates left a note stating that he was tired of this life and bidding the family goodbye He had long courted the daughter of Mrs Taylor and at one time it was understood there was an engagement, but recently it was rumored the engagement was broken. Bates' parents live near Oakland

WOMEN'S VOTES CARRIED MUNICIPAL COURT PROJECT

Des Moines, Ia., Dec 4 —Senator A voters of Des Moines were responsible for the carrying of the new municipal court proposition, the official canvass revealed. The men voters returned a majority of 37 against the court, which won by a bare margin of 81

Judge Ben Wilcox, one of the anti-court leaders, said a contest would likely be filed in a few days, attacking the court on the ground that the women were not legally entitled to vote. This will probably take the form of seeking an injunction against the installation of the court

CHEROKEE YOUNG WOMAN WINS IN NATIONAL CONTEST

Cherokee, Ia., Dec. 4 —Word has been received in Cherokee that Miss Ruby M. Hall, daughter of Mr and Mrs. W. J. Hall, had won the $225 chest of 108 pieces of silverware offered by a manufacturing company of Sag Harbor, N. Y., for the best 50-word answer to the question "Guess What They Are Saying." As this is a national contest and thousands of answers were sent in from Maine to California, the victory is highly complimentary to Miss Hall.

COUNCIL BLUFFS—A J Brown, lacking only a few months of being 73 years old, claims to be one of the oldest men in the state actively engaged in the raising of corn—and he isn't engaged in any "acre corn contests," either. Despite his years, he has this summer done every bit of the work on 37 acres of fine corn just at the edge of the city. As a result of his work and the care and time and thought he devoted to his field, he now has 1,450 bushels of sound corn. He planted in April, and his field matured before the frost.

DES MOINES—Councilman J I. Myerly is being boosted as the probable choice of the city council for the new office of city railway supervisor. In that case Councilman Fred German will add the department of streets to his duties as head of the department of finance, and the council will have but four members instead of five. The new office will pay a minimum salary of $2,000 per year

SCRANTON—Two young married men, Clarence Marchant and Will Anderson, have been missing from their homes since last Saturday night, and up to this date no trace of them can be found. They went away in Marchant's car Relatives are trying to locate them.

UNKNOWN WOMAN WHO CLINGS TO DEPOT IS PUZZLING OFFICIALS

She Is Believed to Be Wealthy and Suffering From Temporary Affliction.

Burlington, Ia., Dec. 3.—An elderly well dressed woman, apparently of means and refinement, but apparently not in her right mind, has been causing Burlington railroad authorities considerable trouble at the union depot during the past three days. She arrived from Hastings, Ia., bound for Blandinsville, Ill., but refused to board the T., P. & W. train, which left for the Illinois town in the afternoon. She was cared for by the police matron and at the depot, and then sent back to Hastings in charge of a railroad official. Monday she was one of the first passengers to step off No. 2, the train from the west, and depot officers are making preparations to send her to Blandinsville.

From appearance the woman is about 50 years of age, and from her clothing appears to be wealthy. She wears magnificent furs, and her clothing, while not the extreme of fashion, is of costly material, and shows that it came from the shop of a first rate tailor

Beyond her reluctance to board the train for Blandinsville, and a strange refusal to answer all inquires as to her identity, she is quiet and self contained Kind women passengers at the station have made efforts to learn her identity, but she persistently refuses to answer all questions in regard to her name.

Patient questioning has elicited the admission that she has an adopted daughter in Hastings and a married sister in Blandinsville. It is believed that she has been visiting with her adopted daughter in Hastings and an effort is being made to send her to the sister she has in Blandinsville

ALLEGED CATTLE THIEVES ARE HELD BY AUTHORITIES

Ida Grove, Ia., Dec 3.—Fred Kline, who has resided near Holstein for the past five years, is in the custody of the Ida county sheriff on the charge of being the leader of a gang recently concerned in stealing and selling cattle. The other men, said to be Swedes not yet identified, are held at Cherokee in connection with the same operations.

So far the authorities have information of five head of cattle being stolen near Battle Creek and 11 head in the vicinity of Cherokee. One lot of five head, taken from the Robert Gracey farm, was traced to Sioux City. Another consignment was sold to a butcher in Ida Grove

ELEVEN CHILDREN ATTACK HENRY VANDERHARR'S WILL

LeMars, Ia., Dec 3.—A case involving more money than any case heretofore recorded in the Plymouth county court records is up for trial in the district court this week It is a case wherein 11 of the 13 children of the late John Henry Vanderharr are contesting the last will and testament of the deceased in an effort to have it set aside Mr Vanderharr before his death on June 13 last, was very wealthy land owner residing between Remsen and Granville in Sioux county, and owned properties valued at $140,000. According to the provisions of his last will he bequeathed $90,000 of the estate to two of his children, to two he left practically nothing and among the remaining nine he divided the remaining portion of his moneys Grounds for setting aside the will are based on a charge of using undue influence The trial probably will occupy a period of not less than 10 days before it goes to the jury

POISONERS ARE WORKING ON HORSES BOUGHT FOR ALLIES

Council Bluffs, Ia Dec 3 — The request made to the city council by the dumpmaster that some arrangement be made for disposal of the seven to 10 horses which die every day in the corral on J Ellsworth's pasture, south of the Union Pacific yards, where local men are assembling horses to fill contracts for war horses for the French government brought to the attention of the council and other people the fact that the contractors are having to deal with horse poisoners.

It was stated that the city dump has been called upon to dispose of an average of seven horses a day for more than three weeks past, from the herd of more than 1,900 which is now being held subject to shipping orders from the French government These horses are inspected on purchase by officers of the French army and their health is supposed to be of the best

DR. FREEMAN HORNIBROOK, CHEROKEE, DIES SUDDENLY

Cherokee, Ia Dec 3. Dr Freeman Hornibrook a prominent physician and surgeon, was found dead in his bed yesterday afternoon He returned in the morning from a long drive and retired not feeling well, and gave directions not to be disturbed When found he had been dead some time

He was a son of Dr Edward Hornibrook, of this city, and a brother of E. J Hornibrook, a prominent attorney of Idaho, and of William Hornibrook, recently appointed minister to Siam

His death was caused by cerebral hemorrhage. He was 36 years old and well known in his profession throughout the state.

REVOLVING DOORS DO NOT MEET LAW, URICK SAYS

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 3.—A. L. Urick, labor commissioner, has ruled revolving doors do not comply with the law requiring that all entrance and exit doors must open outward. Urick holds that while a revolving door opens outward, all right, it does not open the legal way when one is entering through it. He says further:

"Recognizing the great purpose of revolving doors—that of preventing drafts of cold air from entering the establishment—I am of the opinion that where they are permitted they should be of easy collapsible installation, and there should be constructed at the side of such revolving doors an emergency door swinging outward, in this way preventing risks from panic of people in the building during a fire or other catastrophe."

DOW CITY—Dow City and vicinity will establish the first school for country and town pupils in the county, under the law providing for transportation of the children to and from the school house. At the election held on Monday the town voted 81 for and 4 against, and the country included in the district voted 61 for and 26 against. The district will compose the greater part of Union township and part of Paradise township. The county superintendent, Prof. F. N Olry, plans to make this a model for schools of this kind in Iowa.

ALLEGED IDA COUNTY FARMER SOLD STEERS CLAIMED BY ANOTHER

Now Assumed That Seller Was an Imposter and Officers Are Searching For Him.

Ida Grove, Ia., Dec. 1.—John Peters, claiming to be a farmer residing in the northwestern part of Ida county, sold five fat steers to C. A. Christiansen, a butcher in Battle Creek, Monday, November 22, securing $261 for the bunch.

Last Saturday G. W. Smith, a well known farmer residing four and one-half miles north of Battle Creek, found that he was five steers short in a bunch he had in a pasture some distance from his home farm. After a search he found them in Christiansen's feed yard and identified them.

Peters spoke in broken English and claimed he resided northwest of Battle Creek. After receiving the money for the cattle at a bank he loafed around Battle Creek for several hours and disappeared about the time of the west bound Sioux City passenger. Since that time all trace of him has been lost.

Christiansen gives the following description of Peters: Height, five feet six inches; weight about 140 pounds, light hair, wore black plush lined overcoat, spoke broken English and German.

Sheriff McLeod has offered a reward of $25 for his capture or information leading to his arrest.

COMPANY HELD LIABLE FOR SELLING POOR SEED

Nevada, Ia., Dec. 1.—A case that will be of interest to the farmers of the country was decided by Judge E. M. McCall in district court here Saturday when he held that when seed sold by an individual or company does not come up to the quality or is not of the variety represented by the sellers, the purchasers may recover damages in the amount of the difference between the value of the crop raised and the value of the crop that would have been raised had the seed been as represented.

The case was that of Seward Nelson, et al, vs. L. P. Gunnson & Co., of New York. Early in this year men canvassed this county selling seed oats represented to be a variety known as the Mammoth Cluster, which grew to a great height and were supposed to yield all the way from 100 to 150 bushels to the acre. The seed was sold in 10-bushel lots at $2.50 per bushel. Many farmers of the county bought. When the crop grew it showed that a large per cent of the seed was of the ordinary small variety, much of it had smut mixed in it and the grade was not as represented as to the yield.

A bunch of farmers over in the southwest part of the county turned the matter over to an attorney and he brought action against the company in nine counts, asking damages in the sum of $100 each, as well as the amount paid for the seed. The case was tried before Judge McCall the last of the week, and he held in favor of the plaintiffs and issued a judgment in the sum of $1,240 against the defendant company.

HEALY GROWS ELOQUENT ON DEFENDING ERRING WOMAN

Fort Dodge, Ia., Dec. 1.—Ida Van Meter, of Ogden, apprehended at Otho on a charge of adultery, had an able champion in "Mike" Healy in an adjourned session of court. Healy told how the woman had borne seven children to a husband who has provided nothing more than poverty for their lot She is only 37 years old, but what intelligence and ideals she had were benumbed by the sordid existence she had lived He told the court he could offer no suggestion as to what should be done with her and reached the climax of his plea by saying that he found but one precedent for the case and that was when the woman was brought before the Christ and He told her to "go and sin no more."

The attorney then flayed women friends who had raised no hand to aid their fallen sister "In all my years of practice, I have never seen the man who, no matter what he had done, failed to have some friend who tried to help him," he said, "but this poor woman has been in the jail for a week and no soul has been near her to comfort and help her."

The judge imposed a fine of $50 and costs and a 30-day jail sentence, but suspended sentence to see if work could not be procured for the woman. It is hoped she may be taken back to her children by the husband who sent after her.

Tom Cox, the man with whom Mrs. Van Meter went away, as she says, to escape wretched poverty, was sentenced to nine months in the county jail and fined $200.

LOSS ESTIMATED AT $70,000 IN FIRE AT CEDAR RAPIDS

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Dec. 1.—Fire, which started in the basement of a second hand store on South First street last night, destroyed the buildings occupied by the Cedar Rapids Saddlery company, the Kent & Kettering second hand store and the Hubbard wholesale leather store, causing a loss estimated at $70,000, fully covered by insurance.

Shortly after firemen arrived, an explosion wrecked all three buildings and Fireman Milo Prusek was caught under a falling wall. He was taken to a hospital and will recover. The Frick & Kaupke wholesale coffee house and the Churchill hardware building were considerably damaged.

IOWA CITY—One man is in the hospital and another is in jail as a result of a stabbing affray in a Rock Island Railway company box car in the Iowa City yards. I. B. Palmer, one of the company's employes, was stabbed twice in the left side just over the heart, and is in the university hospital, and James O'Connor, who is charged with wielding the knife, is in the county jail pending developments.

FORT DODGE—Leo Schroeder, a self-confessed auto thief, is only 18 years old and has lived in an orphan asylum practically ever since he was 7. For these reasons Judge H. E. Fry, in district court here, suspended a five-year sentence and placed the lad under the guardianship of Robert Healy, attorney.

FORT DODGE—L. D. Whisler, of Mason City, laborer, was killed here when a timber swung around and struck him. He was working on the Illinois Central roundhouse roof and was knocked off the building, falling 18 feet and striking on his head.

IOWA CITY—Harry F. Ashmore, aged 18, who deserted from the battleship Minnesota in Philadelphia last spring, is in jail here. He will be taken to the Great Lakes naval station, near Chicago.

UNIONVILLE—Word reached here that S. P Smith, a farmer, had accidentally shot and killed his grandson, Emery Smith, aged 7, while hunting.

ARMY OF CZAR NOW IN BULGARIA FEAR GREEK

Internal Situation in Nations Will Be Changed by Attack on Czar's Expedition.

INVADERS GET MONASTIR

Fall of Macedonian Capital Last Serbian City of Importance May Menace Allies' Positions.

London, Dec. 4 — News that Russians have entered Bulgaria aroused intense interest and much speculation as to the development," Reuter's correspondent Saloniki telegraphs. "It is this move will have a far reaching effect on the internal situation of Bulgaria and will modify the whole of affairs in the Balkans"

No direct and specific confirmation has been received in London of message It is recalled however last week Emperor Nicholas is to have promised Premier Pasitch of Serbia, the appearance of a Russian army in Bulgaria within a week.

Paris, Nov. 4 The prolonged session of the Greek parliament respecting demands of the entente allies has aroused the suspicion of the French press. One newspaper goes so far as to assert that Greece has consented to conclude a treaty with Bulgaria, by the terms of which Serbia and the Vardar valley in Serbia are "ceded" to Greece in return for action against the Anglo-French expeditionary forces.

London, Dec. 4 —Occupation of Monastir by Austro-German forces at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon is reported by Reuter's correspondent at Saloniki.

The correspondent, who says information was received in a telegram from Florina, Greece, adds that the only flag hoisted when the town was occupied was the Austrian flag. Bulgarians did not enter Monastir, remaining at Kenali south of the city. It is reported, however, that they will march into Monastir today

FALL OF MONASTIR MAY ENDANGER ANGLO-FRENCH

London, Dec 4 Circumstantial accounts of the occupation of Monastir in southwestern Serbia, by an advance German force and the cutting of railway graphic communication with Saloniki are regarded here as ample evidence that the Macedonian capital has fallen although no official report to that effect has reached London.

The effect of the capture of Monastir, the last Serbian city of importance to hold out, on the position of the allied French forces is awaited with the greatest interest for the penetration of the invaders of this part of Macedonia may threaten the flank of the allies on the Vardar and Cerna valleys, where they are on the defensive. No important events have occurred there for some time, but with Monastir in the hands of their opponents, the Bulgarians may soon be engaged in an important battle.

In Montenegro the Austrians have continued their advance Elsewhere in the northern Balkans no heavy fighting has been reported of late

Italy's adhesion to the agreement to conclude a separate peace was welcome news in England, but the failure of Foreign Minister Sonnino to give more than a vague promise of military support to Serbia caused some disappointment. Little light has been thrown as yet on the mystery of Italy's policy in not declaring war on Germany. In this connection it is pointed out that other nations face a similarly delicate situation

It is reported the Austrian forces instead of the Bulgarian was holding Monastir, presumably in an effort to relieve Bulgaria of the possibility of offending Greece

Except for Russian reports of successes on the Dvina in the north and on the Styr in Galicia, no word has been received from the Russian front. Artillery and mining operations are the fighters along the western line.

Fog and incessant rain are delaying operations on the Austro-Italian front. Reports from the Dardanelles indicate that the combatants are engaged in the most continuously in minor encounters which do not seem to have any material effect on their respective positions.

BULGARIA TO ANNEX CONQUERED TERRITORY

Fate of Serbia Bound Up With Fugitive King, Bulgarian Premier Says.

Berlin, Dec. 2 (via London, Dec. 3) —The fate of Serbia is bound up with the fate of its fugitive king, Bulgaria intends to annex the regions with a Bulgarian population. Austro-Hungary will take such measures as are necessary to insure future freedom from Serbian attacks and intrigues. The fate of the kingdom of Serbia cannot now be foretold, for no one knows the future fate of the dynasty. The development of events has not impaired Greco-Bulgarian relations, and there is no desire in Bulgaria to ignore Greece's just aspirations.

This is the substance of an interview with M. Radislavoff, the Bulgarian premier, by Leo Lederer, of the Berliner Tageblatt correspondent. The premier's remarks concerning Serbia confirm and supplement declarations made in an interview by the correspondent several weeks ago.

L. & N. LINE PROSPEROUS

New York, Dec. 3.—The Louisville & Nashville railroad statement for October today, shows an increase in gross revenue of $477,183, which is reduced to $616,318 in net as a result of an increase of $139,134 in expenses.

TREASURER IS LOSER ON DEPARTMENT FEES

Governor Morehead's Claim Is Upheld by Court—Two Departments Affected

Lincoln, Neb., Dec. 3.—Governor Morehead won a decisive victory over State Treasurer Hall today when the supreme court rendered a decision that the treasurer was not justified in withholding moneys paid into the treasury by the fire commissioner as fees received by him [illegible] that a special [illegible] legislature [illegible] this money to the [illegible] department.

The court held [illegible] creating the office of fire [illegible] was intended as a continuing appropriation, and no biennial appropriation is needed. The decision will apply also to the pure food commissioner who has been maintaining his department by keeping and using the fees earned.

BRITONS SHOWING BULL DOG SPIRIT

War Outlook Not Brightened, But Public Generally Feels There Should Be No Compromise.

London, Dec. 4.—(6:30 p. m.)—Speculation about the possibility of peace that seems to come from Switzerland, Rome, Madrid or America always vague and unusually negative, strikes no audibly responsive chord in London.

The more the fortunes of war appear to turn against the allies the less the British seem inclined to listen with patience to any suggestion that peace can come through other means than military achievements.

When Charles Trevelyan, in the house of commons last week, ventured to express the view that there is nothing inherently disgraceful or humiliating in obtaining by negotiation, rather than by fighting the aims "for which we are fighting" and urged the government to inform the house if any proposals of peace come either from neutrals or belligerents, he was but repeating opinions which led his distinguished and scholarly father to withdraw from the cabinet with Lord Morley and John Burns when war was declared.

Trevelyan Scored.

Moreover, his statement that termination of the war by negotiation would give a greater guarantee of permanent peace because less hatred would be engendered served to emphasize the spirit of the house and the people at large. Bonar Law said it was useless folly to pretend to believe that Germany would give up Belgium Poland and Alsace—he might have added Serbia—until she was beaten.

T. H. O'Connor said that such a speech would be forbidden in the French chamber, the Russian duma or the German reichstag and the discussion closed with the announcement of a third member that Mr. Trevelyan's constituents in Yorkshire had already selected another liberal for his seat, as they could not tolerate his opinions.

All observers agree that the peace advocates in Great Britain have dwindled in number. The labor element that at one time was inclined to be lukewarm in the support of the war is now credited with being among its outspoken adherents. labor leaders having thrown themselves eagerly into backing Lord Derby in his recruiting campaign.

Outlook Not Bright.

It is admitted on every hand that the fortunes of war do not at present favor the allies. The Dardanelles campaign, particularly the landing at Suvla bay, is a tremendous disappointment, the advance at Loos has been followed by the general belief, that as a Neuve Chapelle, a brilliant opportunity to make the most of a promising opening was lost, the virtual loss of the Serbian territory and the precarious position of the army that landed at Saloniki are not underestimated, the attitude of Greece and Rumania, the disagreement in the cabinet, and other disturbing factors are all weighed in the balance and contribute to a general appreciation that things are not going well, as Mr Churchill expressed it in his apologia. Still the British are not dismayed and the universal belief is that any chancellory which sounded Downing street on the possibility of peace would find no welcome. That men, munitions and money will win the war is the common conviction that no adversity has shaken.

FRANCE TO PURCHASE BIG MERCHANT FLEET

Paris, Dec. 3.—The French cabinet this morning authorized the ministers of finance and marine to introduce in the chamber of deputies in the name of the government a measure authorizing the purchase by the state of a merchant fleet of 50 ships.

These vessels are to include tank steamers for the transportation of petroleum, and cold storage vessels for transportation of frozen beef to provision the population of France.

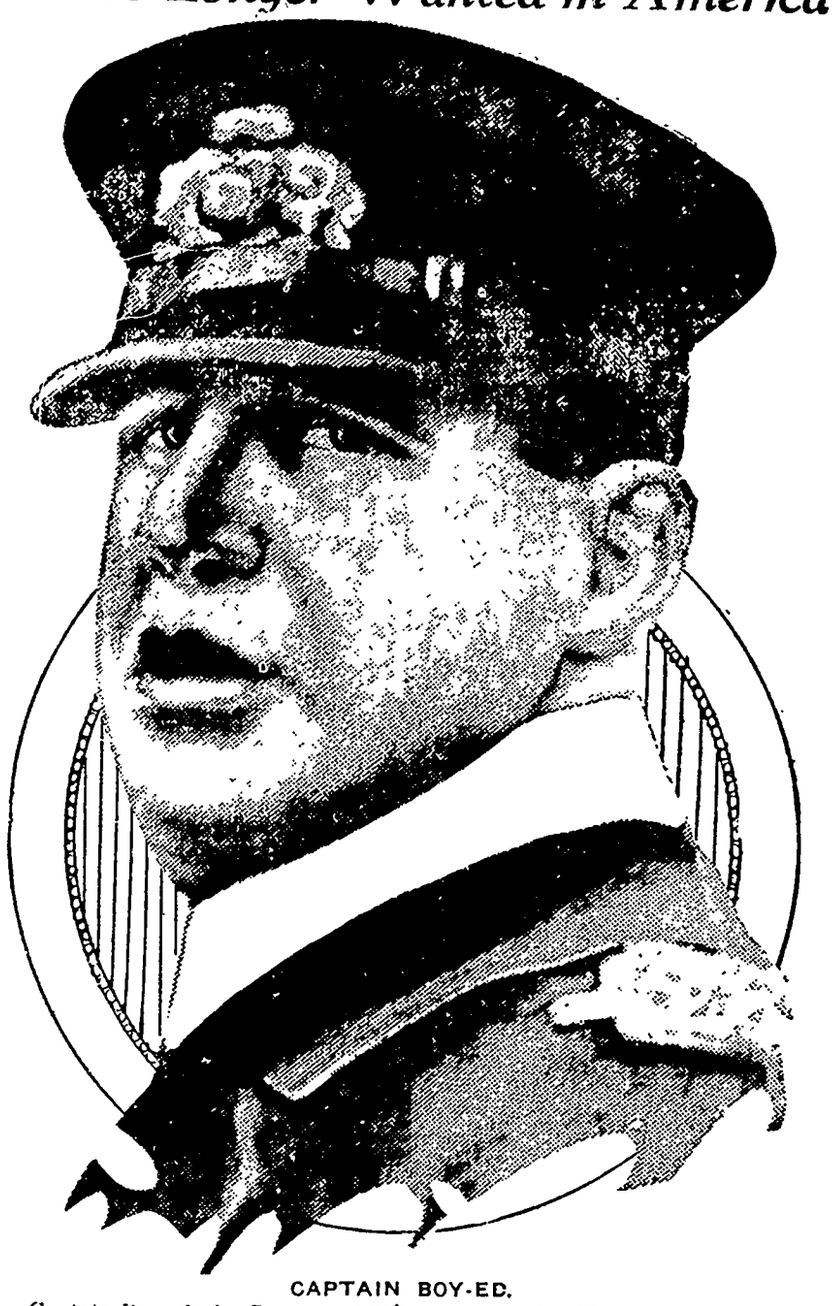
Germany Informed Naval Attache Is No Longer Wanted in America



CAPTAIN BOY-ED.

Captain Boy-ed, the German naval attache at Washington, today was informed that he is persona non grata to the United States government, as the result of his part in the conspiracy to evade the American laws in supplying German sea raiders. Four officers of the Hamburg-American line yesterday were found guilty of conspiracy in the federal court in New York.

FORD APPEALS TO DEAD POPE

Peace Crusader Asks Aid of One Who Died 932 Years Ago.

New York, Dec. 4.—In a long cablegram addressed to the pope, Henry Ford has outlined the manner in which he hopes to end the war and "get the boys out of the trenches by Christmas."

Mr Ford's peace headquarters made public today a copy of the cablegram. This said that from the gathering of peace delegates carried to The Hague by his peace ship, Oscar II, Mr. Ford plans to have selected other delegates to sit in an international peace congress in a neutral capital to formulate peace proposals and present them to belligerent nations.

"For the undertaking most holy father we bespeak your good will and cooperation," Mr Ford also cabled.

The copy of Ford's cablegram as given out showed the message addressed to Pope Benedict VII, who succeeded to the papacy in 975 and died in 983. The present pope is Benedict XV.

MUST BREAK GERMAN KAISER, SAYS SHAW

Britain Must Fight Way to Berlin, He Thinks—Peace Far Off, Author Believes.

London, Dec. 4.—A war lecture by George Bernard Shaw before a mothers' meeting organized by London suffragets yesterday, dealt mainly with the recent peace talk.

"The whole British nation is determined not to have peace now," said Mr Shaw, "for that would mean a triumph for German prestige. You may as well put peace entirely out of your heads, for summer skies may come more than once before we see peace again in Europe.

"Even if the German emperor should retire before his own frontiers and announce that having shown what the German nations and army could do, he was ready to leave matters to arbitration, we could not accept the situation, but would be bound to fight our way to Berlin to show that we could beat them.

"In fighting the German army we are not fighting a wonderful, infallible organization, but we are fighting a romantic dream from which it is absolutely necessary that the German peoples should be awakened. We must make up our minds that the war is going on until that dream is destroyed.

"There is no general desire here for peace."

RESCUE IS SENT TO STEAMER MINNESOTA

Disabled Machinery and Crew Trouble Reported—Carried Foodstuffs for London.

San Francisco, Dec. 3.—The steamer Iroquois and the tug Dauntless were ordered today to go to the assistance of the Hill liner Minnesota, which was 760 miles south of here at midnight.

The Minnesota sent word Wednesday by wireless that she was putting back here because of disabled machinery. It was learned also that there was trouble with the crew.

The Minnesota left Seattle, Wash., November 14 with 16,000 tons of foodstuffs for London, where it was said the vessel would be sold. She was the largest freighters flying the American flag. She was reported from the start as having boiler trouble.

CLOTURE ROW MAY DELAY CONGRESS

Senate Organization May Be Postponed and Joint Session to Hear Message Held Up.

Washington, Dec. 4.—Organization of the Senate may be delayed and a joint session of congress, Tuesday, to listen to President Wilson's address may be prevented unless Senate democrats by next Monday, agree on cloture.

This was the possibility which confronted democratic senators when they resumed in caucus today discussions of the proposal to limit debate.

The conference had before it today a revised amendment to the rules which would prevent a senator from speaking more than an hour on a measure if the Senate decided that filibustering tactics were being resorted to.

Johnson For Pomerene.

Senator Ed Johnson, who is taking part in the Senate democrat caucus, said today he was for Pomerene for president pro tempore, against Clarke, of Arkansas. He is also for cloture. "This fight, as I see it," he said, "is a case of the progressives against the reactionaries."

REPUBLICANS OF HOUSE FORM AN ORGANIZATION

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—Republican members of the House effected their minority organization for the Sixty-fourth congress last night, with Representative Mann, of Illinois, as candidate for speaker and thus again minority leader. The 140 representatives present acted unanimously, except in one instance, when Representative Cooper, of Wisconsin, protested unsuccessfully against the adoption of a resolution, authorizing Mr. Mann to select all republican members of committees.

Mr. Cooper attacked the principle of vesting in any one person the power of naming republican committeemen, and referred to the rules fight in the House some years ago. Representative Cannon, of Illinois, who as speaker was shorn of some powers by that fight, was persuaded not to reply by colleagues, who sought to avoid a discussion.

Representative Mann, in a speech accepting his nomination, spoke of having been invited to confer with President Wilson about national defense.

"I think it would be well," he said, "for these matters to be considered in the military and naval committees from a nonpartisan standpoint, provided the democrats are willing to work on even terms with the republicans, calling in experts who know, but I do not know that any one should expect the president should prepare a program in advance, send it down to the democrats to swallow and then ask the republicans to accept it as nonpartisan."

After choosing the candidate for speaker, the republicans named Representative Green, of Massachusetts, chairman and Representative McLaughlin, of Michigan, clerk of the caucus and nominated the following officers: Clerk of the House, Clarence W. Price, Pittsburgh, Kan.; sergeant at arms, C. W. Sheldon, of Pennsylvania; doorkeeper, Aiken S. Tallman, New York; postmaster, George W. Denny, Tennessee; chaplain, Rev. Dr H. N. Couden, Washington, D. C.

STEEL PLANTS OFFER MATERIAL FOR NAVY

Threat to Open Government Factory Brings Out Bidders—Carnegie Concern Lowest.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 4.—There will be no delay in the delivery of steel for battleships Nos. 43 and 44, if the government undertakes their construction in navy yards. Bids from 11 steel companies, opened today at the navy department, all offered to begin delivery within six months and complete it within two years. Prices show an apparent increase of from 30 to 40 per cent over material purchased for the battleship California over a year ago.

Private bidders for the two ships indicated there would be delay in deliveries of steel and conditioned their proposals on this circumstance. All private bids were rejected as exceeding the $7,800,000 limit of cost fixed by congress. All navy yard estimates were well below that figure.

The Carnegie Steel company apparently was the lowest bidder for the majority of the steel needed, which runs into many millions of pounds.

On the biggest lots of plates the Carnegie figures were .0816 and .01125 a pound for different classes. The same company made low offers for high tensile steel, prices ranging from .0263 to .02645 a pound, and was the only bidder for various kinds of shaped steel.

The American steel foundries of Chester, Pa., was low bidder for steel castings at .06 per pound and the was low for nickel steel plates at .0559 was low for nikel steel plates at .0559 per pound.

FARMERS TO FORM MARKETING PLANS

Greatest Co-Operative Movement in History Launched by Conference Held in Chicago.

Chicago, Dec. 4.—Resolutions creating a central committee to organize the farmers of America into cooperative societies covering every farm product from poultry and garden truck to grain and livestock and operating in each of the 48 states were unanimously adopted at the closing session of the national conference on marketing and farm credits. The adoption of these resolutions by a conference composed of delegates from 45 states was declared by Chairman Frank L. McVey, president of the University of North Dakota, to be the largest cooperative movement ever launched in the history of the world.

Representatives of the conference issued a statement today embodying a score of recommendations to congress urging its cooperation in improving conditions affecting the American farmer.

Ask Congressional Aid.

The statement asked the appointment by congress of a commission of five members to investigate the results of land settlement in the west and other sections of the country "to remove the obstacles to acquiring farms."

Existing conditions in the irrigation sections of the country could be corrected, the statement added, by the enactment of legislation by the states or by the nation, which would provide money to be loaned to settlers.

The conference, it was set forth, will strongly oppose any plan that will end mainly in real estate speculation and increase in land values to the disadvantage of settlers.

"Any plan for aiding settlers," the statement said, "by a better system of rural credits should be preceded by an effective plan for preventing increase of land values."

The department of agriculture was urged to establish standards of measure and quality for all merchantable farm products.

The plan provides first for the forming of an agricultural society on a permanent financial basis, which shall have charge of the general organization and educational work.

Aims of Association.

The purpose of the association to be formed are defined in the resolutions adopted, as follows:

"To examine production and distribution of farm products with a view of evolving a system of greater economy and efficiency in handling and marketing the same.

"To encourage and promote the cooperative organization of farmers and of those engaged in allied industries for mutual help in the distribution, storing and marketing of produce.

Naval Attache, Mixed Up in Teutonic Plots in America, Persona Non Grata, Bernstorff Is Told.

ACTION FOLLOWS SUITS

Secretary of State Acts After Discussion of Matter by the Cabinet Yesterday.

PROMINENT IN WASHINGTON

Rumors Have Long Been Current Government Would Ask for His Early Removal.

Washington, Dec. 3.—The state department announced formally late today that it had asked for the recall of Captain Boy-ed and Captain Von Papen, naval and military attaches, respectively, of the Germany embassy here, because of the "objectionable activities in connection with military and naval matters."

Washington, D. C., Dec. 4.—Secertary Lansing is understood to have informed Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, that Captain Boy-ed, naval attache to the German embassy, had rendered himself persona non grata to the United States government as a result of his connection with the conspiracies of the Hamburg-American line, who yesterday were found guilty in New York.

The subject was understood to have been the subject of discussion at the cabinet meeting today. Secretary Lansing at the end of the cabinet meeting flatly refused to answer any questions on the subject, and other members of the cabinet were equally silent. The German embassy also refused to talk about it.

No Other Course.

The state department was believed to be of the opinion that as Captain Boy-ed had admitted his connection with the financing of the operations which the New York jury gave a verdict as being illegal, there was nothing else to do but inform the German government of its views.

By informing the ambassador that the attache is persona non grata, the United States leaves it with the German government as to the manner in which Captain Boy-ed shall terminate his connection with the embassy. This is the usual diplomatic procedure in the case of an attache of an embassy or a legation whom the United States finds objectionable.

Captain Boy-ed's activities in the United States since the war began have been the subject of close attention by the state department and the department of justice. Several times it has been broadly hinted that the American government might intimate to Germany that the operations of her naval attache were objectionable, with the inevitable suggestion that his connection with the embassy should be terminated.

Each time, however, the threatened action came to nothing. While the state department consistently refused to discuss the captain's case, the German embassy intimated that it had reason to believe he had done nothing for which he should be censured.

Captain Boy-ed's first activities which attracted the attention of the government were in connection with the misuse of American passports to German reservists seeking to slip through the allied lines to join their armies. Some of the men in connection with those whose cases the captain's name was mentioned now are serving terms in federal penitentiaries.

Later Captain Boy-ed's name was mentioned in connection with the chartering of ships from American ports to supply fuel and food to German vessels, which in the first months of the war were hard pressed by the allied flying squadrons. The same alleged connection came up again during the trials of the Hamburg-American line officials just concluded in New York, in which witnesses testified that Captain Boy-ed handled the money which came from Berlin for chartering the ships and furnishing them with supplies.

The government did not contend that an offense against the neutrality of the United States had been committed by sending the ships, but the officials of the Hamburg-American line had guilty knowledge of the fact that the customs houses of the United States were deceived and defrauded into issuing clearance papers for ships on false statements.

The German naval attache has been prominent in the social and diplomatic life of Washington. He is partly of Turkish descent.

Boy-ed Knew Facts.

The inference ran broadly all through the trial that Captain Boy-ed, too, was cognizant of the offenses which the government charged and in the early days of the trial his name was frequently mentioned in open court by the government prosecutors. Finally the state department here suddenly intervened and cautioned the officials of the judicial arm of the government that unless they expected to indict Captain Boy-ed for the offenses charged, the language employed by prosecutors should be avoided for the reason that it might endanger the friendly relations between the United States and Germany.

The German embassy manifested to the state department its displeasure with features of the trial in New York, which reflected upon the character of officials not under charges. The state department in turn indicated that it could not permit any action of the department of justice to bind it to any particular course.

BOY-ED SILENT ON ACTION OF AMERICAN GOVERNMENT

New York, Dec. 3—Captain Boy-ed, German naval attache, declined today to comment on the press reports from Washington that Secretary of State Lansing had informed the German ambassador that he had become persona non grata to the United States government, because of his connection with the Hamburg-American line conspiracy.

QUIT MEAT IF YOUR KIDNEYS ACT BADLY

Take tablespoonful of Salts if Back hurts or Bladder bothers—Drink lots of water.

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid, says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead, and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

What To Look For in Buying A Piano.

Remember a piano is first of all, a musical instrument, not merely a piece of furniture. It must have the musical qualities as well as beauty of design and finish. Decide first on Tone, Action and Durabil itp select design and finish afterward

WELTY PIANOS are built for lasting musical quality. Perfection of tone is the reason for every part, every bit of workmanship, every careful refinement in construction. The very purity and strength of tone show superior quality It does not take a trained musician to appreciate the tone of the Welty Piano All music lovers recognize its beauty. The action transmits the touch of the fingers to the strings It must respond accurately to every variation. To show sensitiveness of action, try getting a soft tone by a very light touch with the "loud" pedal on: then loud crashes to show its strength and wide range of possibilities. Try quick repetitions on the same keys to test the elasticity. These tests show the superiority of the Welty action.

Ramember you run no risk by buying from us. We have done a successful business among you for over 28 years. Our guarantee is faithfully kept. Our instruments give entire satisfaction for a life-time. We invite your personal inspection of these instruments, feeling assured you will be convinced that they are greater bargains in High Grade Pianos and Players than can be purchased elsewhere.

Look here you farmers. You can not afford to spread your maanure by hand. The oats will lodge and you will tear the corn out by the roots either with your harrow or cultivator. This does not pay. Come in and buy a Flying Dutchman or Great Western manure spreader, and do your work right and also raise a big crop of both oats and corn. We will give you a good deal and the best spreader made. The Wheat Yield Tells the Story of Western Canada's Rapid Progress

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The heavy crops in Western Canada have caused new records to be made in the handling of grains by railroads. For, while the movement of these heavy shipments has been wonderfully rapid, the resources of the different roads, despite enlarged equipments and increased facilities, have been strained as never before, and previous records have thus been broken in all directions.

The largest Canadian wheat shipments through New York ever known are reported for the period up to October 15th, upwards of four and a quarter million bushels being exported in less than six weeks, and this was but the overflow of shipments to Montreal, through which point shipments were much larger than to New York.

Yields as high as 60 bushels of wheat per acre are reported from all parts of the country; while yields of 45 bushels per acre are common.

Thousands of American farmers have taken part in this wonderful production. Land prices are still low and free homestead lands are easily secured in good localities, convenient to churches, schools, markets, railways, etc.

There is no war tax on land and no conscription.

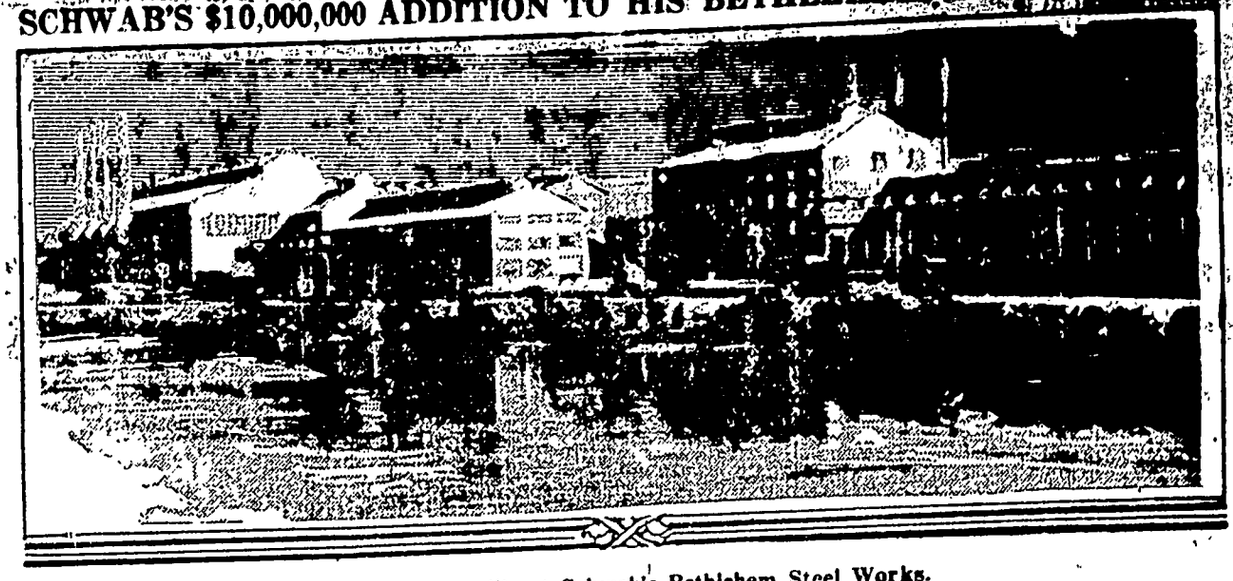
SCHWAB'S $10,000,000 ADDITION TO HIS BETHLEHEM [illegible]



New Merchant mills at Schwab's Bethlehem Steel Works.

Among the latest additions that Charles M. Schwab has made to his steel works at Bethlehem, Pa., is the new Merchant mills, occupying more than 100 acres and erected and equipped at a cost said to exceed $10,000,000. It is said that part of these mills will be used in the manufacture of munitions of war for the allies.

AERIAL STRATEGY IS DEVELOPMENT OF WAR

France Has Solved Many Problems of Air Navigation and Made Service Important.

Paris—(by mail).—Now that France has developed an aerial force with battleplanes, cruiserplanes, scouts and lesser craft, which the officers refer to as torpedoplanes, it has been necessary to organize this overhead service with the same exactness of details that armies and fleets are organized, with tactics and maneuvers of advance and retreat, attack and defense. Unlike an army or fleet, which can move only in one direction parallel with the surface of the earth or water, a fleet of air warships can move in any direction, upward, downward, forward or backward and at any oblique.

All of these tactics of the air are now being worked out with precision. Already the official reports refer almost daily to the maneuvers of an "esquadrille," which is the French term for a squadron of air fighters, and soon there will be mention of the advance or recoil of the "right wing" or "left wing" of these squadrons, as the tactics provide for the assembling of a number of "esquadrilles" into fleets which can be increased in size almost indefinitely. Wells, the English novelist, suggested the deadly effect of 1,000 aeroplanes hovering over Berlin and dropping bombs. The number and maneuver was at the time regarded as fantastic. But the organization of squadrons and fleets of battleplanes and cruisers brings this measurably within realization, and already one attack has been made with 65 aeroplanes, two with over 60, and five with from 30 to 40 air fighters.

The "esquadrille," which is the unit of the aerial organization, at first consisted of six aeroplanes. But the rapid development of fighting types changed the organization so that the "esquadrille" is now made up practically as follows:

Six scout aeros (avions d'observation).

Two armed cruiser-aeros with 3 inch gun (avions de chasse).

One battleplane with two 3-inch guns and one mitraleuse (avion de combat).

Nine lorries, nine trailers, nine portable canvas aero-sheds, three autos

There is one lorrie and trailer and one shed for each of the fighting craft, so as to transport it rapidly to any point and house it until needed The autos are for the commanding officers, and to follow up the flyers when possible. Gasoline, tools, supplies, etc., are carried on the lorries.

70 Men In Squad.

The "esquadrille" thus made up is commanded by a commissioned officer of the army, who acts as pilot of the squadron. Commissioned officers also operate the fighting and cruising aeros, with expert non-commissioned officers and soldiers for the lesser craft. Including the soldiers on the lorries, trailers, etc., an "esquadrille" has a complement of upward of 70 officers and men, of which, however, only a dozen or so are actual flyers.

M. Rene Bernard, the newly designated secretary of state for aviation, has recently given opportunity for the inspection of the new types of air fighters. The battleplane, (avion de combat) and the cruiserplane (avion de chasse), are the two main developments. Only partial descriptions of these craft is permitted; nothing can be stated as to the number of planes of the monster battleplane. But it is permitted to indicate its power by saying that it has carried 12 men in its flights, and that it mounts on its huge outstretched wings two three-inch cannon, one at either tip, with a rapid fire mitraleuse in the middle, just above the pilot. The recoil of the cannon does not jar the craft, owing to an automatic device, explanation of which is not permissible.

The other type, cruiser-aeros, or avions de chasse, mount one three-inch cannon in the middle and just ahead of the pilot. These cruisers can mount almost straight up from the ground, at the rate of about 2,000 meters in two minutes, so that they can go straight up to an enemy as soon as he is observed, instead of mounting slowly on long curves as of old.

Seek Speedier Craft.

But France is not stopping with these new devices, and her engineers and constructors are inspired with the thought of a rich prize of 50,000 francs for a still further advance, which will realize 200 kilometers an hour with four motors, two pushing and two pulling.

The "esquadrilla" or squadron is only the unit of organization, and it is in assembling them that the real fighting maneuvers are accomplished. The directing head of the organization is here in Paris, connected with the ministry of war. Here all the orders are given and the service regulated. The machines themselves are at aero parks scattered all over France, the names of these places being withheld from mention. Here they are gathered in hundreds and given their final tests before going to the fighting line.

But it is on the fighting line that the real maneuvers begin. The aero-parks, for actual service are a short distance in rear of the fighting forces, each park at the front being made up of four "esquadrilles." So that, as each "esquadrilles" has nine aeros or various form, the four "esquadrilles" of each park comprise 36 aeros, including battleplanes, cruiserplanes and scoutplanes. In turn, these parks back of the line are connected, so that these equipment of 26 machines in each can be rapidly brought together for a concerted attack or defense. As these parks stretch from end to end of the long battle line their number and aggregate of aircraft must be very large. As stated, the concentrations of 65 fighting craft have already been carried out, and much larger concentrations are in view.

New Fighting Tactics.

The fighting tactics have developed a number of interesting phases. It is a strange fact that one of the most useful devices has resulted from the capture of an enemy aero. This brought to light a fine instrument of precision, made by a well known optical firm of Berlin The instrument records with exactness the moment and place when an aeroplane is precisely vertical above a given point on the ground below That is, there is no trusting to the eye, and when the instrument shows the vertical point—as, for example, an enemy battery below—a bomb dropped from the aeroplane is certain to hit that exact point. It is, in fact, an aerial range finder, showing the exact moment when a bomb will strike a given spot.

Another strange device used in these battle tactics is a battery of 12 small glass bottles, set in a wire rack within easy reach of the operator. The latter flies over the enemy's lines, the purpose being to signal back to his own batteries how their shots are taking effect, thus giving them the exact range. The little glass bottles contain a liquid which explodes five seconds after the cork is drawn, emitting a little round puff of smoke, or a short trail of smoke. This is aerial telegraphy. The smoke puffs are dots; the smoke trails are dashes. Thus the pilot talks back to the far away battery, in dots and dashes of smoke, telling the watchers that their shots are too high or too low, or too far to the left or right, and thus giving them the exact range.

Still another remarkable development in the French tactics is the use of wireless, by which aeroplans are kept in communication over a radius of 220 miles with a central station. The aero-wireless is a small and delicate set, with light antennae above and from tip to tip of the wings, the wire automatically winding up if the aero is unmounted These are in actual use, and besides supplying the new French machines the English and Russians are being similarly equipped, the demand from these three sources being greater than two large manufacturing companies can produce.

Besides the foregoing rapid development and organization in military aviation, there is a distinct branch of naval aviation, with a warship of considerable tonnage set aside for this particular purpose and a rendezvous at one of the ports, which it is not permitted to mention This naval aviation looks after the coast points, the approach of hostile craft, and the aerial strategy of the sea, as the army conducts the aerial strategy on land

A Heroine of Modern Greece.

From the New York World.

It pleases the instinct of analogy to picture the Grecian queen as a modern Helen, cause of woes innumerable, of fierce, vain battles. The likeness may be overworked, but it exists.

Greece lives at the mercy of sea power. Her people were always sailors, their merchant fleet is huge, their navy weak. Less than half the race are on the mainland By joining the allies, Greece could have had Cyprus at once, and later much of the Syrian coast The powers that at Navarino made her free could at Smyrna have made her united. No wonder the people were fired with the vision of Venizelos!

As it is, Greece may stay on the fence not much longer If her king pushes her off on the German side, she must starve under blockade. Britain may retake Corfu, which she ceded only on condition of the constitutional government that the king defies. Italy and France may divide almost at will Syria and the Aegean Islands. Serbia may yet have Salonica if the allies win

Is it not astounding that when honor and advantage point a nation's way so clearly, it can be controlled by the stale old trick of imperial marriage; by planting on a strategic spot, long before, the daughter of a modern grand monarch, and about her court building up a structure of intrigue and bribery and usurpation in the interest of autocracy against the people?

Some say women have little political power, here is one by whose influence, and what it represents, 1,000,000 men must needlessly die and her land risk ruin. For if Greece had carried out its promise at the Dardanelles—if even she had kept her king's own treaty with an ally—the war need not have looked so long and dark and terrible in prospect as it does today.

FRIENDSHIP—THE NEW ENGLAND CONCEPTION

(Ralph Waldo Emerson.)

Our friendships hurry to short and poor conclusions, because we have made them a texture and dreams, instead of the tough fiber of the human heart. The laws of friendship are great, austere and eternal, of one web with the laws of nature and of morals. But we have aimed at a swift and petty benefit to suck a sudden sweetness. We snatch at the slowest fruit in the garden of God, which many summers and winters must ripen. We seek our friend not sacredly, but with an adulterate passion which would appropriate him to ourselves.

I do not wish to treat friendships daintily, but with roughest courage. When they are real, they are not glass threads of frost-work, but the solidest thing we know.

The end of friendship is a commerce, the most strict and homely that can be joined; more strict than any of which we have experience. It is for aid and comfort through all the relations and passages of life and death. It is fit for serene days, and graceful gifts, and country rambles, but also for rough roads and hard fare, shipwreck and poverty and persecution. It keeps company with the sallies of the wit and the trances of religion. We are to dignify to each other the daily needs, and offices of man's life, and embellish it by courage, wisdom and unity It should never fall into something usual and settled, but should be alert and inventive, and add rhyme and reason to what was drudgery.

OLD IDEAS ABOUT TEETH.

From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The mothers of Breton will not touch a baby's gums, lest the teeth grow crooked.

Teeth have often been, and to this day sometimes are, worn as amulets. Sharks' teeth serve this purpose in Samoa.

There was a tradition that from the time Chosroes, the Persian, carried off a piece of the true cross from Constantinople, the number of teeth in the mouths of men was reduced from 32 to 23. It is needless to say, however, that mankind is usually provided with a full complement of 32.

Teeth have been worshiped, and, in fact, are venerated as relics, in some religious shrines. Buddha's tooth is preserved in a temple in India, and Singhalese worshiped the tooth of a monkey, while an elephant's tooth and a shark's teeth served a similar purpose among the Malabar islanders and the Tonga islanders, respectively.

The period of teething being an anxious one in childhood, it is extremely important to have it over with. In the west of England a necklace of beads made from peony root was placed on the child's neck to assist the operation, and one of amber beads was also thought to be powerful, either being considered a help, according to the complexion of the child, so were the different colored beads used. It was also said that the first teeth must not be thrown away when they fall out, for if any animal got such a trophy the next tooth would be like that of the animal finding the old one.

COFFEE AND TEA.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate).

Coffee and tea are easy to make. They are not worth drinking if they are not well made. And yet in six houses out of eight they are not well made—not worth drinking.

The coffee is murky and state in taste. The tea is biter and heavy.

For both tea and coffee fresh, clear water must be used. For tea it must be absolutely boiling, and it should boil for a minute or two before pouring it on the leaves. For both tea and coffee too, absolutely clean receptacles must be used, but their nature matters little. To be sure, a china or pottery teapot is much better than a metal one, but a delicious cup of tea can be brewed from leaves wrapped in a bit of cheesecloth and simply plunged into the boiling water in the cup for two minutes. Cleanliness, however, is essential.

There is only one correct way of making tea—that is pouring bubbling, boiling water on the dry leaves, and pouring off the tea from the leaves in two or three minutes.

But there are many ways of making good coffee. One is to mix the coffee grounds with a little egg white, and enough cold water to moisten them. Then pour half the amount of water to be used, boiling hard over the grounds. Place over a low heat and let it come to the boil. Fill up with the remainder of the boiling water, draw to a lower heat, and allow it to stand for three or four minutes.

Some persons make coffee by pouring cold water on the grounds, mixed with egg and a little water, and letting this slowly come to a boil. Still others never put the coffee pot over the direct heat, but stand it in a pan of boiling water until it is sufficiently strong. A good way to keep coffee hot, and at the same time fresh tasting, is to pour it off from the grounds when it is made, into a fresh pot or pan, and to place this in a pan of boiling water.

Then there are the various drip and percolator methods in which the water drips through the grounds and no egg is used. Some persons really prefer the egg taste to coffee, but drip and percolator coffee is easier to make, and gives surer results to the inexperienced cook.

In Lincoln's Youth and Now.

From Better Farming.

Abraham Lincoln wore patched pants. He did not wear them on the platform in his great debates with Douglas. He did not wear them in the presidency. He probably did not wear them because he liked to. He wore them because he had to. He was a poor boy, but was infinitely rich in having a mother who knew how to patch. She not only patched little Abraham's breeches, but she could patch a dollar bill so it went further than $10 will now go in the hands of most of our modern women.

The mother of Abraham Lincoln did not live within reach of a department store, neither did she have the money wherewith she could go and buy a pair of ready-made everythings nor hang up the bill on Thomas. She not only patched the clothes to make them last three or four seasons, but she saved the wood ashes and made lye; and with lye and hog grease made soft soap. No electric lights illuminated that little Kentucky cabin. She had to try out the tallow from the mutton and mold it into candles. All these expedients and makeshifts and domestic economies are in the days that have passed. Are we better for it? The next generation will tell us.

There are no Jeremiahs up at the headquarters of Better Farming, but the man who writes this is the father of six children, and he takes a lot of pride and satisfaction in his parental job, but he is willing to bet a dollar to a doughnut that it is a harder job to raise Abrahams Lincolns in these days of luxury and ample comforts and $15 ready-made suits for boys of 15 that it was when Abraham Lincoln wore home-knit socks and homespun frocks in the backwoods of the country. Who takes the bet?

The possibility of devising an electrical machine for solving numerical equations to any degrees has recently been suggested by a French author. Essentially, the machine will consist of a collection of various electro magnetic machines, connected in cascade; the armature circuit of one machine being used in the excitation circuit of the next and so on. It has been demonstrated by a commentator on the suggestion that by the connection of transformers in cascade, it would be possible not only to solve algebraic equations but linear differential equations with constant coefficients as well.

MOVABLE KIDNEY.

The kidneys are held [illegible] muscles of the back by the [illegible] which lie about them The [illegible] cient of the supporting structure peritoneum- the membrane [illegible] holds the intestines in place. [illegible] importance is the perirenal fat. [illegible] zone around the kidney is one [illegible] places where fat is found if there [illegible] anywhere

One sign by which a meat [illegible] judges of the maturity of veal [illegible] the amount of fat around the kidneys [illegible] there is no fat around the kidneys [illegible] calf is too young and the veal [illegible] to be unwholesome If the [illegible] a cow has no fat around the kidneys [illegible] probability is that the inspector [illegible] condemn it as too emaciated to [illegible] for canned meat

Fat wedges the kidney into [illegible] er position The support of surrounding organs helps to maintain the kidneys in place The kidney is movable. It is constantly shifting position within narrow borders. [illegible] inhalation moves it down a little, every exhalation carries it back [illegible] slight range of movement does make the kidney a movable kidney.

In a very arbitrary way the [illegible] tists fix the following definitions: a kidney can be moved low enough that its lowest part is on a level with the navel it is called movable. If it can be pushed below that level in addition can be moved around several directions, it is called floating kidney. In a floating kidney the peritoneum keeps somewhat behind the kidney. In movable kidney the peritoneum is wholly on the front of the organ.

People of a certain build are more able to develop movable kidneys. Measure the distance from the top of the breast bone at the root of the neck to the top of the public bone at the front end of the abdomen Measure the circumference of the body at the level of the 10th rib. Divide the first of these figures by the second and multiply the result by 100. If the index thus calculated is more than 77 you are liable to have movable kidneys. If it is under 75 you are not liable to have it. As many women and few men have indices over 77, it follows that women frequently have movable kidneys, men rarely. Movable kidney is of little importance from the health standpoint.

Sometimes a kidney pitches forward and downward in such a way as to bend the ureter sharply. In such cases the ureter is stopped and colicky pains may result. This is the rule. The rule is that movable kidneys or floating kidneys do not harm and produce no symptoms. You may be called as a juror some day and you may have to decide a damage suit in which it is claim is made that a certain accident produced a movable kidney and that movable kidney produced a long train of symptoms. Jurors, whether they are proper or improper, are in the habit of deciding such cases as much on common knowledge and opinion as on the evidence in the case. As a matter of fact you are justified in starting with the conviction that injuries rarely produce movable and floating kidneys and that movable and floating kidneys rarely produce symptoms.

Anders says "The general symptoms of movable kidneys are those of neurasthenia of hysteria. There is anxiety leading to melancholia. Sometimes follows the discovery of a movable abdominal tumor This is especially to movable kidney. Operation for movable kidney is not advisable in most cases. A special belt holds the kidney in place in some cases.

A LITTLE ICE CREAM.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate).

Have you ever tried making two quarts of ice cream in a big freezer and then tried making a pint in a one-pint freezer?

If you never have tried the small ice cream freezer, do so as soon as possible. It costs only a little more than a dollar and it is such a saver of time and labor that every household, no matter how large, should have one.

Of course, a pint of ice cream is hardly enough for more than two persons. But why not use ice cream as a garnish? It has a very real and useful place as a garnish.

In one of these small ice cream freezers a pint of ice cream can be made in 15 minutes—and that is from the time the moment the freezer is begun until the little freezer full of ice cream all frozen is set in the refrigerator until needed.

The ice for such a small freezer of course must be finely chopped—finer than it must for a large freezer. Use an ice chopper or shaver, and chop the ice in a wooden bowl. Then mix with a third its own measure of coarse salt and start the freezing. Have the cream under chilled in the refrigerator at hand, and have all the ingredients cold, and the process of freezing will be even shorter.

Ice cream frozen in one of these small freezers cannot be kept very long, as it needs no packing—simply add extra pieces of ice pushed in at the top. And if the freezer is set in the refrigerator it will keep from three-quarters of an hour and an hour.

Suppose you have the very thing for dessert of baked apples for instance. With each topped with a tablespoonful of vanilla ice cream they become a feast.

Or suppose there are some lady fingers and soft custard on hand, but no cream. Beat up an egg, add sugar and vanilla to some milk and freeze it. Then line dessert glasses with the lady fingers, add a tablespoonful of custard to each, and with a spoonful of the ice cream.

With sliced peaches and quinces a spoonful of ice cream is delicious. And with desserts of all kinds ice cream is an improvement on whipped cream very often.

Custard, mixed with chopped nuts and served in dessert glasses topped with ice cream is delicious. Add a spoonful of peach ice cream in the center of half a chilled peach and it makes it a dessert out of the ordinary.

Many have believed that [illegible] for use by soldiers in the trenches [illegible] been developed only since the beginning of the present war in Europe. A confederate veteran of the Civil war reports that his regiment, while on Kenesaw mountain, "captured a sharpshooter who had a small looking glass attached to the butt of his rifle, so that he could sit behind his breastwork, perfectly protected, with his face to us, and by looking into the glass sight along the barrel of his rifle."

Dr. Juichi Soyeda, who has accepted the presidency of the Japanese railway bureau, is one of the most polished Japanese best known to visitors to Japan for his courtesy, his keen intelligence and finest hospitality. Dr. Soyeda was the vice minister of finance for a long time has been governor of the Industrial Bank of Japan. This bank, connected with the French bank. He is well known in America where he was sent by the Japanese chamber of commerce as representative to visit the Japanese residents in the United States, in connection with the California land dispute some years ago.

Even Wisdom Has Its Price.

'Tell me,' said the youth who had come many miles to seek an interview with the Shelbyville Sage, 'how I may acquire real wisdom.'

"By coming across with $2 for a copy of my book,' replied the venerable man, "not necessarily as a guarantee of good faith, but as a tribute to my business instinct I am not running this sage business for the benefit of my health See?"

THE GLOVED HAND

A Detective Story

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

Author of "The Holladay Case," "The Marathon Mystery," "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet," etc.

CHAPTER V (Continued.)

"I have no idea," he answered, and turned to another anxious perusal of the letter

I turned the situation over in my mind Evidently Miss Vaughan thought she had grave cause for alarm, and yet it was quite possible she might be mistaken She was being urged to consent to something against her will, but perhaps it was for her own good In any event, I had seen no indication that her consent was being sought by violence There must be no interference on our part until we were surer of our ground

'Well, Swain," I said, at last, " I will help you on one condition '

'What is that?"

"You will meet Miss Vaughan tonight and hear her story, but you will take no action until you and I have talked the matter over She, herself, says that she has three days,' I went on, as he started to protest, 'so there is no necessity for leaping in the dark And I would point out to you that she is not yet of age, but is still under her father's control"

'She is 19,' he protested

In this state, the legal age for women, as for men, is 21 The law requires a very serious reason for interfering between a child and its father Moreover,' I added, "she must not be compromised If you persuade her to accompany you tonight, where would you take her' In no case, will I be a party to an elopement—I will do all I can to prevent it."

He took a short turn up and down the room his hands clenched behind him.

"Mr. Lester," he said, at last, stopping before me "I want you to believe that I have not even thought of an elopement—that would be too base, too unfair to her But I see that you are right She must not be compromised."

"And you promise to ask my advice?"

"Suppose I make such a promise, what then?"

"If you make such a promise, and I agree with you as to the necessity for Miss Vaughan to leave her father, I think I can arrange for her to stay with Mr and Mrs Royce for a time. There she will be safe Should legal proceedings become necessary, our firm can help you I want to help you, Swain," I added, warmly, "but I must be convinced that you deserve help. That's reasonable, isn't it?"

Yes," he agreed, and held out his hand, "and I promise."

'Good. And now for the arrangements."

Two 12 foot ladders were necessary, one for either side of the wall, but, beyond a short step ladder, the place possessed none except the long one by which Godfrey and I had mounted into the tree Swain suggested that this might do for one, but I felt that it would be better stay where it was, and sent Hargis over to Yonkers to buy two new ones, instructing him to bring them back with him

Then Swain and I reconnoitered the wall, and chose for the crossing a spot where the glass escarpment seemed a little less formidable than elsewhere.

"You can step from one ladder to the other" I pointed out," without touching the top of the wall A mere touch would be dangerous in the dark"

He nodded his agreement, and finally we went back to the house. Getting there, we found suddenly that we had nothing more to say Swain was soon deep in his own thoughts, and, I must confess, that, after the first excitement, I began to find the affair a little wearying, and, besides that, the glimpse which I had caught of Marjorie Vaughan made me think that she was worthy of a bigger fish than Swain would ever be. He was right in saying that there were thousands of men who had more to give her, and who would be eager to give

I examined Swain as he sat there staring at nothing, with eyes not wholly friendly He was handsome enough, but in a stereotyped way And he was only an insignificant clerk, with small prospect of ever being anything much better, for he had started the battle of life too late. Honest, of course, honorable, clean hearted, but commonplace, with a depth of soul easily fathomed I know now that I was unjust to Swain, but, at the moment, my scrutiny of him left me strangely depressed.

A rattle of wheels on the drive brought us both out of our thoughts. It was Hargis returning with the ladders. I had him hang them up against the shed where he kept his gardening implements, for I did not wish him to suspect the invasion we had planned; then, just to kill time and get away from Swain, I spent an hour with Hargis in his garden; and finally came the summons to dinner An hour later, as we sat on the front porch smoking, and still finding little or nothing to say, Mrs. Hargis came out to bid us good night.

"Mr Swain can use the bedroom next to yours, Mr Lester," she said.

"Perhaps he won't stay all night," I said. "If he does, I'll show him the way to it. And thank you very much, Mrs. Hargis."

"Is there anything else I can do, sir?"

"No, thank you."

"Mr. Godfrey will be here a little before midnight—at least, that's his usual time."

"We'll wait up for him," I said. "Good night, Mrs. Hargis."

"Good night, sir," and she went back into the house.

I have never passed through a longer or more trying hour than the next one was, and I could tell by the way Swain twitched about in his chair that he felt the tedium as much as I. Once or twice I tried to start a conversation, but it soon trickled dry, and we ended by smoking away moodily and staring out into the darkness.

At last Swain sprang to his feet.

"I can't stand this any longer," he said. "I'm going over the wall."

I struck a match and looked at my watch.

"It isn't 11 o'clock yet," I warned him.

"I don't care. Perhaps she's be ahead of time. Anyway, I might as well wait there as here."

"Come on, then," I agreed, for I felt myself that another such hour would be unendurable.

Together we made our way back to the shed and took down the ladders. A moment later, we were at the wall. Swain placed his ladder against it, and mounted quickly to the top. As he paused there, I handed him up the other one. He caught it from my hands, lifted it over the wall, and lowered it carefully on the other side. As he did so, I heard him give a muffled exclamation of mingled pain and annoyance, and knew that he had cut himself

"Not bad, is it?" I asked.

"No, only a scratch on the wrist,' he answered shortly, and the next instant he had swung himself over the wall and disappeared.

CHAPTER VI

THE SCREAM IN THE NIGHT

For some moments, I stood staring up into the darkness, half expecting that shadowy figure to reappear, descend the ladder, and rejoin me. Then I shook myself together The fact that our plot was really moving, that Swain was in the enemy's country, so to speak, gave the affair a finality which it had lacked before. It was too late now to hesitate or turn back, we must press forward. I felt as though, after a long period of uncertainty, war had been declared and the advance definitely begun So it was with a certain sense of relief that I turned away, walked slowly back to the house, and sat down against upon the porch to wait

Now waiting is seldom a pleasant or an easy thing, and I found it that night most unpleasant and uneasy For, before long doubts began to crowd upon me—doubts of the wisdom of the course I had subscribed to. It would have been wiser, I told myself, if it had been I, and not Swain, who had gone to the rendezvous, wiser still, perhaps, to have sought an interview openly, and to have made sure of the facts before seeming to encourage what might easily prove to be a girl's more or less romantic illusions. A midnight interview savored too much of melodrama to appeal to a middle aged lawyer like myself, however great its appeal might be to youthful lovers. At any rate, I would be certain that the need was very great before I consented to meddle further

Somewhat comforted by this resolution and by the thought that no real harm had as yet been done, I struck a match and looked at my watch. It was 11.30. Well, whatever the story was, Swain was hearing it now, and I should hear it before long. And then I caught the hum of an approaching car and was momentarily blinded by the glare of acetylene lamps.

"Hello, Lester," called Godfrey's voice, "I'll be back in a minute," and he ran the car on toward the rear of the house.

I stood up with a gasp of thankfulness. Here was some one to confide in and advise with. The stretch of lonely waiting was at an end, it had been a trying evening.

I think the warmth of my greeting surprised Godfrey, for he looked at me curiously.

"Sit down, Godfrey," I said. "I've got something to tell you"

"What, discoveries already"" he laughed, but he drew a chair close to mine and sat down. "Well, what are they?"

I began at the beginning and related the day's adventures. He listened without comment, but I could see how his interest grew

"So young Swain is over in those grounds now," he said thoughtfully when I had finished

"Yes he's been there three-quarters of an hour."

"Why do you suppose Miss Vaughan named so late an hour?"

"I don't know. Perhaps because she was afraid of being discovered earlier than that—or perhaps merely because she's just a romantic girl."

Godfrey sat with his head bent in thought for a moment.

"I have it," he said. "At 11:30 every night her father and the adept go up to the roof, to remain there till midnight. That is the one time of the whole day when she is absolutely sure to be alone. Come along, Lester!"

He was on his feet now, and his voice was quivering with excitement.

"Where are you going?" I asked.

"Up the ladder. It is nearly 12. If the star falls as usual we'll know that everything is all right. If it doesn't—"

He did not finish, but turned away among the trees. In a moment we were at the ladder, in another moment we were high among the leaves, straining our eyes through the darkness.

"I'm going to look at my watch," said Godfrey in a low voice. "Lean back and screen me."

I heard the flash of the match and saw a little glare of light against the nearest leaves. Then Godfrey's voice spoke again.

"It's 3 minutes of 12," he said.

There was a tension in his voice which sent a shiver through me, though I understood but dimly what it was he feared. The stars were shining brightly, and once I fancied that I saw the strange star appear among them; but I closed my eyes for an instant and looked again, it was gone. Slow minute followed minute, and the hand with which I clutched the ladder began to tremble. The sight of that mysterious light had shaken me the night before, but not half so deeply as its absence shook me now. At last the suspense grew unendurable.

"It must be long past midnight," I whispered.

"It is," agreed Godfrey gravely; "we may as well go down."

He paused an instant longer to stare out into the darkness, then descended quickly. I followed and found him waiting, a dark shadow. He put his hand on my arm, and stood a moment, as though in indecision. For myself, I felt as though an intolerable burden had been laid upon my shoulders.

"Well," I asked at last, "what now?"

"We must see if Swain has returned," he answered. "If he has, all right. If he hasn't, we'll have to go and look for him."

"What is it you fear, Godfrey?" I demanded. "Do you think Swain's in danger?"

"I don't know what I fear, but there's something wrong over there. This is the first night for a week that that light hasn't appeared."

"Still," I pointed out, "that may have nothing to do with Swain."

"No; but it's a coincidence that he should be in the grounds—and I'm always afraid of coincidences. Let us see if he is back," and he turned toward the house.

But I held his arm.

"If he's back," I said, "he'll have taken the ladders down from the wall."

"That's true," and together we made our way forward among the trees. Then we reached the wall and there was the dim white line of the ladder leaning against it. Without a word, Godfrey mounted it, stood an instant at the top and then came down again.

"The other ladder is still there," he said, and took off his cap and rubbed his head perplexedly. I could not see his face, but I could guess how tense it was. I had been with him in many trying situations, but only once before I seen him use that gesture!

"It won't do to alarm the house," he said, at last. "Do you know where he was to meet Miss Vaughan?"

"At an arbor in one corner of the grounds," I answered.

"Then we'll start from there and take a quiet look for him. Wait here for me a minute."

He melted into the darkness, and I stood holding on to the ladder as though in danger of falling, and staring at the top of the wall, where I had last seen Swain An hour and a half had passed since then.

A touch on the arm brought me around with a start

"Here, put this pistol in your pocket," said Godfrey's voice, and I felt the weapon pressed into my hand "And here's an electric torch Do you feel the button?"

"Yes," I said, and pressed it. A ray of light shot toward the wall, but I released the button instantly

"You'd better keep it in your hand," he added, "ready for action. No telling what we'll run across. And now come ahead."

He put his foot on the ladder, but I stopped him

"Look here, Godfrey," I said, "do you realize that what we're about to do is pretty serious" Swain might have a legal excuse, since the daughter of the house invited him to a meeting, but if we go over the wall, we're trespassers pure and simple Anybody who runs across us in the darkness has the right to shoot us down without asking any questions—and we'd have no legal right to shoot back'"

I could hear Godfrey chuckling, and I felt my cheeks redden

"You remind me of Tartarin," he said, "the adventurer Tartarin urging you on, the lawyer Tararin holding you back. My advice is to shake the lawyer, Lester. He's out of his element here tonight But if he's too strong for you, why, stay here," and he started up the ladder.

Burning with vexation, I started after him, but suddenly he stopped.

"Listen!" he whispered.

I heard something rattle against the other side of the wall, then a dark figure appeared on the coping.

I felt Godfrey press me back, and descended cautiously. A moment later, something slid down the wall, and I knew that the person at the top had lifted the other ladder over. Then the figure descended, and then a distorted face stared into the circle of Godfrey's torch.

For a breath, I did not recognize it; then I saw that it was Swain's.

I shall never forget the shock it gave me, with its starting eyes and working mouth and smear of blood across the forehead Godfrey, I knew, was also startled, for the light flashed out for an instant, and then flashed on again.

"What is it, Swain?" I cried, and seized him by the arm, but he shook me off roughly.

"Stand back!" he cried, horsely. "Who is it?" What do you want?"

"It's Lester," I said, and Godfrey flashed his torch into my face, then back to Swain's.

"But you're not alone."

"No, this is Mr. Godfrey."

"Mr. Godfrey?"

"Whose house we're staying at," I explained.

"Ah!" said Swain, and put one hand to his head and leaned heavily against the ladder.

"I think we'd better go to the house," Godfrey suggested, soothingly. "We all need a bracer. Then we can talk Don't you think so, Mr. Swain?"

Swain nodded vacantly, but I could see that he had not understood. His face was still working and he seemed to be in pain.

"I want to wash," he said, thickly. "I cut my wrist on that damned glass, and I'm blood all over, and my head's wrong, somehow." His voice trailed off into an unintelligible mumble, but he held one hand up into the circle of light, and I saw that his cuff was soaked with blood and his hand streaked with it.

"Come along, then," said Godfrey peremptorily. "You're right—that cut must be attended to," and he started toward the house.

"Wait!" Swain called after him, with unexpected vigor. "We must take down the ladders. We musn't leave them here"

"Why not?"

"If they're found, they'll suspect—they'll know . . . " He stopped, stammering and again his voice trailed away into a mumble, as though beyond his control.

Godfrey looked at him for a moment, and I could guess at the surprise and suspicion in his eyes. I, myself, was ill at ease, for there was something in Swain's face—a sort of vacant horror and dumb shrinking—that filled me with a vague repulsion. And then to see his jaw working, as he tried to form articulate words and could not, sent a shiver over my scalp.

"Very well," Godfrey agreed, at last. "We'll take the ladders, since you think it so important. You take that one, Lester, and I'll take this."

U. S. NAVAL YACHT INTERNED BY TURKS

Eleanor Franklin Egan, in the Saturday Evening Post:

The American naval yacht Scorpion, at Constantinople, is to all intents and purposes an interned naval craft. She was ordered in from the Bosporus not long ago and tied up in a berth in the Golden Horn, just wide enough to hold her, and there she lies under the never-sleeping eagle eye.

A Turkish revenue cutter lies alongside so close that a whisper can be heard from deck to deck; and night and day a Turkish official sits there scanning the Scorpion from stem to stern and watching the comings and goings of every soul who approaches her.

The Scorpion is under grave suspicion. She is accused of all the unneutral crimes on the calendar. She has been supplying the British submarines with gas and food supplies and information; she has been intercepting wireless messages in some miraculous way—her wireless apparatus being swathed in cotton wool and sealed up so tight that an air current could not get near it; she has been just so bad that she ought to be sunk with all hands aboard; and the officials are very lenient who do nothing to her but tie her up where her officers and men have to gasp for breath in the midst of 100 ships, little, big, packed in so close that the outwash from a rowboat causes their hulls to knock together.

A statue to Virginia Dare, the first American born child of English parents, is to be erected on Roanoke island, the site of Sir Walter Raleigh's "lost colony," according to report from Kingston, N. C. The statue is by Miss Louisa Lander, of Washington. Miss Lander was born in Salem in 1826 and a statue of Virginia Dare was one of her later works.

An inventor in Holland is said to have invented an artificial rubber of which the chief ingredient is extracted from fresh caught sea fish

The Aftermath.

The banquet was at its height. The sparkling wine was flowing like the water that used to come down at Lodore in the old third reader, and the gentleman-whom-we-have-with-us-this-evening was rolling on and on. Unnoticed by the guests, a company of Indigestions, Bustheads, Gouts, Dropsies, Lethargies, and so forth, clasped hands and danced around the festal board in transport of glee.

"The humans don't seem to be enjoying it as much as they might," they chortled, "but look at the fun we'll have tomorrow!"—Kansas City Star.

Criticism Implied.

"He doesn't like my cooking," sobbed the three months' bride, a tear on her long lashes. "I just know he doesn't. So, there!"

"What makes you think so?" her mother asked ."Has he said he doesn't like your cooking?"

"N-no-o," stammered the bride.

"Nonsense, child, it's just your imagination. I felt there was no basis—"

"There is a basis," the bride insisted tearfully. "I had been cooking the loveliest things for him for about two weeks and then he told me he had decided to become a raw-food faddist. Bo-hoo-o-oo!"—Judge.

Philanthropical.

"Don't you come across a good many things in the Bible that you don't understand, like the problem of Cain's wife, for instance?" queried the layman, as he sat at a city restaurant table.

"Oh, yes, of course," acknowledged the clergyman.

"Well, what do you do about it?"

"My dear friend," replied the minister, laying down his fork, "I simply do just as I would while eating a nice fresh herring. When I come to the bone I quietly lay it on one side, and go on enjoying the meal, letting any idiot that insists on choking himself with the bone do so."—London Tit-Bits.

HARD TO DROP

But Many Drop It.

A young Calif. wife talks about coffee:

"It was hard to drop Mocha and Java and give Postum a trial, but my nerves were so shattered that I was a nervous wreck and of course that means all kinds of ails.

"I did not want to acknowledge coffee caused the trouble for I was very fond of it. At that time a friend came to live with us, and I noticed that after he had been with us a week he would not drink his coffee any more. I asked him the reason. He replied: 'I have not had a headache since I left off drinking coffee, some months ago, till last week, when I began again here at your table. I don't see how anyone can like coffee, anyway, after drinking Postum!'

"I said nothing, but at once ordered a package of Postum. That was five months ago, and we have drank no coffee since, except on two occasions when we had company, and the result each time was that my husband could not sleep, but lay awake and tossed and talked half the night. We were convinced that coffee caused his suffering, so he returned to Postum, convinced that coffee was an enemy, instead of a friend, and he is troubled no more by insomnia.

"I have gained 8 pounds in weight, and my nerves have ceased to quiver. It seems so easy now to quit coffee that caused our aches and ails and take up Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

GRANDMA NEVER LET HER HAIR GET GRAY

Kept her locks youthful, dark, glossy and thick with common garden Sage and Sulphur.

When you darken your hair with Sage Tea and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it's done so naturally, so evenly. Preparing this mixture, though, at home is mussy and troublesome. For 50 cents you can buy at any drug store the ready-to-use tonic called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning all gray hair disappears, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully darkened, glossy and luxuriant. You will also discover dandruff is gone and hair has stopped falling.

Gray, faded hair, though no disgrace, is a sign of old age, and as we all desire a youthful and attractive appearance, get busy at once with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur and look years younger.

Why It Pays To Trade With Firms That Advertise

¶ Advertising creates sales. The modern business man knows this; he also knows he must depend upon many sales with a small profit rather than on a few with big profits. The world knows the firm that advertises most can sell cheapest.

THE DEAD TOWN

Did you ever go into a town and as you stepped from the train, have it strike you suddenly that the town was dead? Have you ever had a town described to you as a "dead" town? Have you ever stopped to analyze just what is meant by these words, "dead town?" In the last analysis they mean just one thing—and that is that the merchants of the town don't advertise. A dead town has certain aspects of demise, which are as bald as a piece of crepe hanging on the door of a private house. The stores seem to be merely existing. Their shelves are covered with apparently unsaleable goods. The storekeepers seem to be vying with each other to see which will win the first prize as the town grouch. If you talked with them they knocked the town, they knocked business, they knocked the mail order house. They were continually complaining that other people did business and made money but that they didn't seem to be able to sell anything. They guessed it was the town. Yes that was it,—the town. If you asked that merchant if he advertized, he would have looked at you with amazement. What was the use of advertising when business was so bad? People who had money to spend, he would tell you, were sending it to the mail order house. No, he would say he didn't advertise? He wouldn't throw good money after bad. On the other hand, go into a live town and what will you see? The merchants have attractive displays in their stores. The daily or weekly newspapers are filled with big announcements of special sale of low priced goods. They are not afraid of the mail order house because they have the same means to reach the people—advertising—that makes the mail order house great. The merchants have their local association for mutual help, and behind the association the local newspaper is pushing—pushing, pushing. Everybody is working and everybody is happy and boosting. If you want a live town get behind the newspaper and the newspaper will do the rest. Forget the timeworn arguments that the paper is a dead one. The paper is alive enough if the people are alive. The surest test of a live town is a live newspaper, and a newspaper can't be alive unless the town boosters do their share.

KLEMME, IOWA

Women have proved to be very excellent machinists in England, pressed into this service by the exigencies of warfare. About 800 girls are now employed in the munitions factories of that country, and at an early date a great many more will be so engaged. Some of these have been at work four months, and were trained by such skilled operatives as were available for the work of instructors. These girls were found to be capable of a good output on many of the operations after only a week's instruction. Lady superintendents are in charge of the place night and day and a good messroom is provided for meals. All the operations, with one exception, in the making of 18-pound shells, are carried out by the girls. The output on some of the operations exceeded expectation, owing to the keenness of the girls, so much so that some of the machines provided have actually been found to be superfluous, and other machines have been shown to be capable of more work than had ever been believed to be possible. There is plenty of such labor available in the country, and all the women are moved by the keenest spirit of patriotism.

The two French generals, Gallieni and D'Amade, whose names figure prominently in the news of the day, have had careers in striking contrast. Gallieni, honored in the French official journal for the part he played in the battle of the Marne, is pre-eminently the man of action, and has had a long career of almost unbroken successes He was the youngest general of the division in the French army since the days of Napoleon and, like Napoleon, is a Corsican. As a military commander his reputation for brilliant resourcefulness is borne out by the way he sent 20,000 men to the front in Paris taxicabs when these men were needed in a great hurry. General Gallieni is a man of the people, and his rapid rise is accredited to his own abilities exclusively.

The introduction of the tobacco habit among the Chinese dates back only a few years, and its spread throughout the country has been astonishingly rapid, so it is stated by Consul General Anderson, at Hongkong. The cigaret habit is not confined to the men. Girls and women of all classes and ages, from 10 years of age upward, indulge as freely and openly in cigarets, and with as much apparent enjoyment as do their brothers.

Finland has an area of 144,249 square miles, of which one-seventh is water on account of the innumerable lakes in the interior. At the end of 1914 its population amounted to 3,196,700, divided among eight lans, or governments. Of the population of the grand duchy, less than one-sixth live in the cities, of which there are only 15 having more than 5,000 inhabitants. Helsingfors, the largest city, has a population of 164,000.

It is said that Finland has an area of 144,249 square miles, of which one-seventh is water on account of the thousands of lakes in the interior. There are 15 cities with a population of over 5,000, only a sixth of the population being urban

BANKER C. C. CARTER, PERCY, CONVICTED OF FRAUDULENT BANKING

Many Persons Made Penniless In Failure of Institution—New Trial Asked.

Knoxville, Ia., Dec. 11.—C. C. Carter, former banker at Percy, this county, and at Hartford, Warren county, indicted in the December, 1914, term of the district court on a charge of fraudulent banking, was found guilty, recently, after the jurors had been out about eight hours. When Carter's failed in 1914 many persons in moderate circumstances were left penniless.

After being indicted Carter disappeared from Iowa. He returned when his 400-acre tract of land was put up at sheriff's sale. He was arrested last October.

Attorneys defending Carter have filed notice of an appeal for a new trial.

STATE PRESENTS MOTIVE IN MEYER MURDER CASE

Winterset, Ia., Dec. 11.—The state late yesterday completed its case in the trial of Fred Meyer, young farmer charged with the murder of his bride of five months, Ethel Clayton Meyer, July 25, last. Witnesses yesterday threw further light upon the motive for the alleged crime—Mrs. Meyer's insistence that her husband cease his drinking parties.

Perhaps the strongest of the state's witnesses today was Dr. W. H. Thompson, of Winterset, who conducted the autopsy over Mrs. Meyer's body. Dr. Thompson stated he extracted the bullet from the young wife's brain and that he found it to weigh 74 grains. A bullet of .38 caliber—the caliber of the revolver found by her side and with which the defense insists she killed herself—he testified would weigh from 145 to 150 grains. His testimony was confirmed by that of National Guard Capt. C. W. Aiken, who testified as an expert upon revolver bullets.

KICKS ABOUT ICE WATER; IS LODGED IN CITY JAIL

Cherokee, Ia., Dec. 11.—Objecting to the quality of the ice water furnished to him at the Lewis hotel, Ernest Javaux, a traveling salesman, became involved in a row that resulted in his arrest and incarceration in the city jail. On the trial of the case it was not clear whether Javaux or the hotel porter had been the agressor, so a small fine was assessed against each for disturbing the peace.

When the porter told the hotel manager of the salesman's objections and actions, Night Marshal Braley was summoned with instruction to arrest Javaux. The salesman refused admission to the marshal and considerable excitement ensued. The marshal broke down the door and "roughed" Javaux in true police style before the salesman would consent to being led to jail.

Javaux denied any conduct that warranted the abuses heaped upon him, aside from protestin., on the service, and it is said that he will launch a heavy damage suit against the hotel management

DUBUQUE TELLER MISSING AND SHORT IN ACCOUNTS

Dubuque, Ia., Dec. 11 —While no announcement of the amount of his irregularities has been made, it is known that Frank J. Neuwoehner, teller at the German Trust & Savings bank, is short in his accounts. His whereabouts is not known. A formal statement yesterday was made by bank officials, announcing whatever irregularities may be revealed are fully covered by his surety bond, and stating that he is no longer in the employ of the institution.

It is stated Neuwoehner was living beyond his means, that he maintained a social stride out of keeping with his salary, that he owned a summer cottage on the river and maintained a launch.

While not formally announced, it is known the federal grand jury yesterday returned indictments against George J. Homan, Joseph Harragan and Joseph Sieg, former officials or employes of the Dubuque National bank, arrested during the summer for embezzlement or misappropriation of funds of the institution.

COREY AGAIN SECRETARY OF IOWA STATE FAIR BOARD

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 11.—A. R. Corey was reelected secretary of the Iowa state fair board yesterday and W. W. Morrow, of Alton, reelected treasurer. The state fair board has been offered the annual national swine show, which is looking for a permanent home. The offer is being considered.

William Connover, of Hudson, was reelected president of the Iowa Draft Horse Breeders' association, with G. E. O'Brien, of Des Moines, secretary, and M. J. Nelson, of Cambridge, treasurer. It was predicted that there would be no shortage in the demand for horses, should peace come, and the association advised Iowa farmers to breed more horses, saying the demand for them is increasing. Speakers declared horses would not be supplanted by the tractor on farms or by the automobile trucks in the cities.

CROSSMAN TITLE CLOUDED ON CROSS-STATE JOURNEY

Council Bluffs, Ia., Dec. 11.—W. H. Crossman, driving a Hupmobile car, arrived in Council Bluffs at 4:30 yesterday afternoon, 10 hours and 40 minutes after leaving Clinton, as against Hal Wells' previous record of nine hours and 15 minutes.

For some reason, Crossman did not personally report at any of the usual places en route. Local reporters and automobile men at a late hour last night had not succeeded in locating him. At 6:30, two hours after his reputed arrival, someone dropped a note in the office of a local newspaper, giving the hour of his arrival. The bearer of the note did not identify himself, and was gone before the nature of his errand was understood.

DICKENS—An auto driven by Adrian Ives, in passing another auto, driven by Mr. Lander, of Greenville, became blinded by the strong electric lights of the Lander car, and did not see a carriage occupied by the Misses Webers and struck the hind wheel of the buggy. Then the other auto struck the Ives car, turning it over.

M'MILLAN ARCTIC EXPLORERS LEARN OF EUROPEAN WAR

Clinton, Ia., Dec. 10.—Word that the McMillan arctic expedition in north Greenland was in good condition April 1, amply provisioned for another year, is contained in a letter received today by Mrs. Jerome Lee Allen, of Maquoketa, from her husband, a wireless operator with the expedition. The letter, dated April 6, was carried out by an Eskimo, who sledged 400 miles to south Greenland.

The party had just received news of the European war, the letter said, and was anxiously awaiting the arrival of a ship.

WITNESSES DECLARE MEYER'S YOUNG WIFE DID NOT KILL HERSELF

Revolver Found by Her Side Not Used in Years—No Powder Marks on Face.

Winterset, Ia., Dec. 11.—City Marshal Clarence McComber, of Winterset, proved a strong witness for the state in the trial of Fred Meyer, 22-year-old farmer, charged with the murder of his young wife last July. The state is seeking to prove, largely through McComber's testimony, that Mrs. Meyer could not have been killed with the revolver found by her side and with which Meyer maintains the young wife committed suicide.

Ethel Clayton and Fred Meyer were married last February. Both were very young. They went to live with the elder Mrs. Meyer on the farm home near the Dallas county line. On July 25 Mrs. Fred Meyer was found in an upstairs room, a bullet wound in her head and a revolver lying by her side. She lived several hours after medical aid had been summoned.

Meyer and his mother insisted the young wife committed suicide and said that she remarked when they found her that she did not wish to live any longer.

City Marshal Clarence McComber, witness for the state, declared the bullet wound in the young woman's head could not have been inflicted by the revolver found by her side. He said the weapon lying by her had not been fired for some time before the tragedy. It was so rusty from lack of use that a strong man could scarcely pull the trigger, he asserted. Drs. Brewer and Glen, of De Soto, also witnesses for the state and who attended the young woman before her death, testified that there were no powder marks on the flesh, as would have been the case had the young woman held the revolver herself. They declared she could not possibly have made the statement attributed to her by Meyer and his mother, as, they assert, she was no longer able to speak. They also said the wound in her head could not have been made by a revolver of the caliber found by her side.

The state maintains that Mrs. Meyer was slain with another revolver and that this weapon was secreted after the tragedy.

Thus far the state has produced no motive for a support of the murder theory and the defense has advanced little to support its theory of suicide.

Mrs. Meyer, mother of the accused man, and herself facing a charge of murder, is a constant attendant in court. Both she and her son are at liberty under bonds of $30,000 each.

PRIMGHAR COUPLE WILL GO TO CHURCH AT BOMBAY, INDIA

Primghar, Ia., Dec 11 —Announcement has been made of the appointment of Rev. and Mrs. H. Ingham, of Primghar, to the pastorate of the Bowen Memorial church in Bombay, India. They will sail from San Francisco, January 22.

The Bowen Memorial church is one of the most important English churches in India. Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Ingham were in New York last week taking the necessary examinations and appearing before the board of foreign missions of the church

Rev. Mr. Ingham has held three pastorates in the northwest Iowa conference—Calumet, Milford and Primghar

WOMAN 50 YEARS OF AGE DABBLES IN ILLICIT LOVE

Council Bluffs, Ia., Dec 11 —By request of the county attorney Mrs. Elizabeth Greteman, 50 years of age, and the mother of 10 children, was released today from a statutory charge preferred by her husband. In spite of the fact that the woman was found living with another man 18 years younger than herself, and that the complaining husband seemed to have a legitimate grievance, the county attorney severely grilled the complainant. He accepted the woman's personal statement that she left her home because she had to work too hard. James McQueen, Mrs. Greteman's companion in a West Council Bluffs residence, was held to the grand jury

Mrs. Greteman and McQueen came here from Templeton, Ia. When the woman left home about a week ago, McQueen disappearing at the same time, the deserted husband employed a detective, who located the couple apparently living together as man and wife in a small residence here

At the arraignment of the couple here Greteman manifested a forgiving disposition towards his wife, and she returned home with him, after being released from custody "He always made me work so hard," Mrs. Greteman said in court. The husband promised the officials to be more considerate in future.

MEAT PRODUCERS ARE SUSPICIOUS OF PACKERS

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 11 —The Corn Belt Meat Producers' association sharply criticized the packing companies for present low prices and for sudden and unannounced price changes.

Joseph H Allen, of Pocahontas, declared the packers should be dealt with as were the railroads—by an organized fight. He charged the reduction in prices for live stock did not go hand in hand with the reduction in prices of the packers' product

These officers were elected by the meat men: S. M. Corrie, of Ida Grove, president; Charles Goodenow, of Wall Lake, treasurer, and R. M Gunn, of Buckingham, vice president. The secretary is elcted by the board of directors. S. C. Wallace, of Des Moines, now holds that office.

BEN MIDAY, BURLINGTON BRAKEMAN, SHOT BY TRAMPS

Council Bluffs, Ia., Dec. 11.—Several tramps attacked Ben Niday, aged 30, a Burlington freight brakeman, near Bartlett, last night, shooting him five times. Several of the bullet wounds are serious, and Niday may die. The tramps leaped from the train and escaped in the darkness. Niday's gun was shot from his hand and part of the member torn away as he sought to defend himself.

FOUR WOMEN HURT WHEN TOURING CAR HITS COUPE

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 9—A small child crossing a street here caused a collision between an electric coupe and a touring car in which four women, prominent in social circles, were seriously injured. They were:

Mrs. Frank Madden, Cincinnati, Ohio; Mrs. Charles Perry, Omaha, Neb.; Mrs. Alfred Jarvis, Des Moines.

Mrs. Jarvis was driving the coupe and Charles Perry, whose wife was injured, was driving the tourning car. Both vehicles, in an effort to avoid hitting the child, swerved out of line and collided.

THREE PERSONS DEAD AT STORM LAKE FROM TUESDAY'S TRAGEDIES

Young Man and Young Woman Are Drowned in Lake—Runaway Kills Another Man.

Storm Lake, Ia., Dec. 10—Three tragic deaths occurred here yesterday afternoon from accidents. Edward Ball, football coach at Buena Vista college, and Fern Benedict, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Benedict, of this city, were drowned while skating on Storm lake this afternoon at 5 o'clock, and in less than an hour afterward John Riley was killed in a runaway accident two miles west of town.

Ball, who was a big, powerful fellow, and Miss Benedict went to the lake about 3 o'clock and skated for some time not far from shore. When out about 400 feet the ice gave way.

There were quite a number of skaters near at the time, and four young fellows immediately went to the rescue, but the ice would not bear them up. The rushed to the road near by and stopped a farmer in a wagon, getting some rope and the sideboards from the wagon, but still they were unable to reach the drowning pair.

Word was sent to town, a distance of about a mile, and E. A. Barrels, with his auto, rushed to the lake, broke into a boathouse and secured a boat and grab hooks. Miss Benedict was quickly rescued, and in a few minutes Ball was dragged out. They had been in the water for less than 40 minutes, but notwithstanding this fact physicians who were on hand as soon as they were taken out failed to resuscitate them.

Ball came to Storm Lake from California at the opening of the football season and proved both popular and efficient. His parents live at Valparaiso, Ind. He was 28 years old and unmarried. Miss Benedict was born and reared at Cleghorn, moving to Storm Lake five years ago. She was about 22 years old.

Scarcely had the news of the drowning become known when the report reached town from the country that John Riley had been killed when a team which he was driving to a wagon ran away and threw him out, breaking his back and crushing his skull. He had lived in Storm Lake for years and was the son of Mrs. Martin Riley. He was about 30 years old and unmarried.

REPORT OF SALOON FIGHT DOES NOT WORRY COSSON

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 10.—Attorney General George Cosson is very little disturbed by the report that some of the liquor dealers in Iowa will try to enjoin the mulct law repeal in a final effort to keep from closing their places of business the first of the year. In a recent communication to the county attorneys of Iowa Mr. Cosson said he proposed to see that Iowa had prohibition "in fact as well as technically," and that he would make every effort to see that the law was obeyed. He said that the postponement of the enforcement of the prohibitory law from July 4, as is usually the case, until January 1 was done with the idea of giving the liquor dealers an opportunity of disposing of their stock and fixtures without great financial sacrifices. That this opportunity is being taken advantage of is indicated by the communications coming into Mr Cosson's office.

BASEBALL PLAYER AWARDED $525 IN SLANDER SUIT

LeMars, Ia., Dec. 10.—In the district court Ernest Trafford, a well known baseball pitcher, was awarded $525 damages by a jury. Trafford sued Walter Collins, a manufacturer, for slander and assault. Collins accused Trafford of being too familiar with Mrs. Collins, and one day last summer called Trafford to the Collins home and after making the accusation assaulted him Trafford sued for $5,000.

Mrs. Martha Verstraeten was awarded $57 damages in her suit against Barrett brothers, wealthy farmers of Hinton vicinity Mrs. Verstraeten, while acting as housekeeper for the Barretts, was injured while pulling up a wire fence, falling into a heap of broken glass and rubbish, cutting one of her arms to the bone and severing two sinews She sued for $1,000 damages.

FOUND DEATH OF FARMER WAS DUE TO STRYCHNINE

Davenport, Ia., Dec. 10 —Whether Ed Drummond, a prominent and wealthy farmer residing near Donahue, took poison with suicidal intent or whether enemies tried to kill him seems due to remain a mystery as three days' investigation by local authorities has brought no solution

Drummond died last Thursday afternoon No indication that the death was from other than natural causes was given the public until Saturday, when it became known that the coroner had held an autopsy over the body and had a chemical examination made of the stomach of the victim.

Traces of strychnine were found in the stomach and these coincided with the manner of Drummond's death He was taken violently ill on the train going from Davenport to Donahue. He was unconscious when his destination was reached and died a short time after being taken off the train and carried home

McCLAUGHRY WILL BE NAMED AS WARDEN AT ANAMOSA

Des Moines, Ia., Dec 10 —According to indications at the state house, C C McClaughry will be reappointed warden of the Anamosa reformatory for a period of four years beginning January 1, 1916.

Members of the board of control said that the delay in taking up the matter of appointing a warden for the term expiring December 31, was to enable the board to finish its inspection of the Anamosa reformatory before making the selection The inspection has been made and the institution is said to be in good shape

It was also indicated yesterday that the board will not consider placing McClaughry over the Fort Madison penitentiary and placing Warden Sanders, now of Fort Madison, over the Anamosa reformatory. The misunderstanding with regard to the wardenship at Anamosa is said to have developed out of the fear of some of McClaughry's friends that he would not be reappointed.

PROTESTS ALLOWANCE TO LYON COUNTY FAIR

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 8.—William B. Fey, of Rock Rapids, who is protesting against state aid to the Lyon county fair because, he says, gambling was permitted, declares he will seek to enjoin the state auditor from issuing a warrant for the amount sought in case the state fair board overrules his protest.

[illegible] OVERTAXES OFFICERS

Last Day For Enrollment of British Volunteers Results In Crash.

London, Dec. 13.—There was an unprecedented rush this morning at the recruiting stations. Physicians and clerks nearly exhausted by the work of the last three days, were confronted on arrival at their posts this morning with long lines of men—in many cases several hundred—waiting for the opening of the doors.

To handle the crowds the staffs at the recruiting stations have been increased. Enrollment under the Earl of Derby's plan ends at midnight.

In the rush medical examination has become as perfunctory as the signing of the recruit's name, and it is expected many of those who have come forward will be rejected when called for active service.

The crowds became so great that it was manifestly a physical impossibility to examine all the applicants before midnight. The authorities therefore decided to permit attestation under the Derby plan until midnight of Sunday. If the rush still continues, recruiting officers will make lists of applicants and these men will be permitted to present themselves for attestation up to midnight of Wednesday.

CONSPIRACY QUIZ IS UP TO SENATE

Resolutions For Congressional Inquiry Into Foreign Interference With Trade, Plots, Etc., Submitted.

Washington, Dec. 13.—Further action on a state resolution demanding congressional investigation of British interference with American trade, with an amendment to extend the inquiry to cover bomb plots and loss of American lives, in submarine accidents on vessels on the high seas, rested today with the foreign relations committee.

The resolution, proposed yesterday, by Senator Hoke Smith, of Georgia, who in a sharp speech denounced the British order in council, drew the amendment from Senator Lodge.

"The body of an innocent child, floating dead on the water, the victim of destruction of an unarmed vessel is to me a more poignant and a more tragic spectacle than an unsold bale of cotton declared the Massachusetts senator.

To Senator Smith's resolution for an investigation of trade interferences, Senator Lodge who is the ranking minority member of the foreign relations committee offered an amendment for investigation of the law and the facts in the submarine attacks on the Lusitania, Falaba, Hesperian, Arabic, Gulflight and Ancona, and of the plots and conspiracies against the neutrality of the United States to which President Wilson referred in unmeasured terms in his address to congress Tuesday.

Sent to Committee.

Both resolutions were referred to the foreign relations committee upon which further action will depend. Their introduction, however, had served to bring out the first debate of the session of a subject to which all minds had turned.

Senators on both sides of the chamber were drawn into the discussion which was precipitated by a vigorous speech by Senator Smith in support of his resolution.

"I wish to extend the scope of the resolution by my amendment" said Senator Lodge, as the Georgia senator concluded, "because if we are to take up this question of the violation of our rights, I want to put it not on the lowest ground alone, but on the highest ground as well. I think it is of great importance that we should vindicate our rights as a neutral in trade if those rights have been violated, but I think it is far more important that we should extend protection and assure security to American citizens wherever they rightfully are, for I do not believe that any government can long retain the respect of its own people if it does not give them the protection to which they are entitled.

"I think Americans should be protected in their lives and in their liberty everywhere. I do not think they ought to be murdered by retail and obscurety in Mexico, or openly by wholesale on the high seas.

Lives Above Dollars.

"Although I am as anxious as anyone can be to care for our rights in trade if they are violated, to me American lives are more important than American dollars. If this investigation is to go on and especially if congress is to take action, I want it to take in all the violations of all our rights that may have occurred. The most important is the violation which has affected American lives or the security of an American citizen, men, women or children. And the next most important are those pointed out by the president of the United States in his message the other day when he referred to the destruction of property accompanied by destruction of life in the United States and stated that conspiracies in alien interests are going on within our borders.

"I think that if we are to investigate and inquire with a view to action, such deeds as these should not be omitted. I am not willing to get in a passion over an infringement of our trade and then allow American citizens to lose their lives and have it go by in frigid silence. I think the United States stands for something higher in the world than mere trade and mere dollars. I do not want to see our citizens wronged in their properties, but I think we should also stand and above all for morality and humanity in the dealings of nations with each other."

Senator Works, of California, asked Senator Lodge if his amendment was comprehensive enough to include investigation of parts played by citizens of the United States in sending ammunition on ships which had been attacked or destroyed. He was assured that it was meant to include inquiry into all angles of the general subject of belligerent interference with ships.

GIANT MOBILE GUNS FOR COAST DEFENSE

War Department Experimenting With New Type of Portable Cannon.

Washington, Dec. 13.—Gigantic guns mounted on motor trucks or railway cars, probably will be added to the country's coast defense system, as a result of experiments now being made by army ordnance experts. It was learned today that a scheme is being worked out contemplating the establishment of mobile batteries to protect stretches of coast line not commanded by the permanent fortifications built or to be recommended. Part of the $80,000,000 expenditure for coast defenses included in the administration program may be devoted to this work.

The European war has demonstrated that high power guns can be used as mobile weapons such guns as the Germans use having revolutionized land warfare on the assumption of forts believed impregnable. It is proposed to adapt this lesson to American coast defense by linking permanent works with well ballasted wagon roads or railways paralleling the coast line so that the heavy guns could be rushed to any threatened points not protected by the present harbor defenses.

The experiments in progress are being made to determine how big a gun can be effectively transported and transferred from its carriage to a concrete foundation. Consideration is being given to 12 inch, 14 inch, 16 inch, and even larger guns.

NOT ALL HARMONY IN PEACE COUNCIL

Quarrel Said to Have Led to Exposure of Von Rintelen's Activities—Baron Zweidinek Involved.

New York, Dec. 13.—A quarrel which rent Labor's National Peace council into two antagonistic factions was stated today by federal officials to have been largely responsible for the uncovering of an alleged conspiracy involving Franz Von Rintelen to instigate strikes in munition factories.

According to this statement a number of the members of the council joined the organization believing it was a body formed to work impartially in the interests of peace. Later they discovered it is said, that an inner ring of German sympathizers and agents of Von Rintelen was in control and intended to use the council as a means to further the strike propaganda.

When the government started an investigation into the activities of Von Rintelen, several men who had been officials of the peace council and had resigned went to the federal authorities and placed at their disposal a mass of information regarding the inner workings of the council.

L. P. Straube secretary of the council, is said to have been one of these men. He is due from Chicago tomorrow and will be questioned by United States Attorney Marshall. He is also expected to be one of the principal witnesses for the grand jury when that body reconvenes next week.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor will be another witness. It was stated at the federal building today that the call for reconvening the grand jury is being held up pending definite information as to when Mr. Gompers can get here.

Washington, Dec. 11.—The state department has received a photographic copy of a letter said to have been written by Baron Erich Zweidinek von Sudenhorst, August 26, 1914 to the Austrian consul general at New York stating that nine Austrian reservists in San Francisco desired to come to New York and proceed thence to Austria and suggesting that it might be possible to procure suitable passports of neutral countries at comparatively slight expense. The Austrian consul at San Francisco, the letter said, had been instructed to send the men to New York.

Baron Zweidinek is at present charge of the Austro-Hungarian embassy the highest diplomatic representative of his country in the United States.

At the time of writing the letter he was counsellor to the embassy.

State department officials, while admitting that they had received a copy of the letter and other letters alleged to have been written by Baron Zweidinek, declined to comment on them or to state what disposition would be made of them.

Baron Erich Zwiedinek charge of the Austro Hungarian embassy today called upon Secretary Lansing to explain a letter he wrote in August 1914, in which he suggested that passports be bought for Austrian reservists. The state department has a photographic copy of the letter.

The charge is understood to have informed Secretary Lansing that at the time the letter was written he was a subordinate in the embassy.

Dr. Constantin Dumba, the ambassador who has been recalled, was then in charge, and it was said that Baron Zwiedinck contended that he was acting not upon his own initiative, but under the instructions of the ambassador.

BRYAN IGNORES COURT; HE MUST SHOW CAUSE

New York, Dec. 11.—William Jennings Bryan, former secretary of state, in an order signed by Supreme Court Justice Whitaker today was declared in default for failure to answer a summons to appear as a witness in the suit for alleged libel brought by Petros T. Tatanis against D. J. Viasto and S. J. Viasto.

The court also issued an order requiring Mr. Bryan to show cause why he should not be adjudged in contempt of court. This was made returnable December 23.

BIG MILL BURNS.

Kingston, Ont., Dec. 11.—The kraft plant of the Maple Leaf Milling company, whose plant at St. Catherines was burned a few days ago, was destroyed by fire today. The stock, valued at $50,000, and the plant is said by the company to be a total loss. The cause of today's fire is unknown, but circumstances surrounding both fires led to the assertion that spies were responsible.

The horn of the rhinoceros is not joined to the bone of the head, but grows on the skin.

LOCKED OUT!

Fairbanks and Root Believed To Be Planning to Enter Race

Washington, D. C., Dec 11.—With the republican national committee due to meet here next week and with some of the members of that body already arriving, there is marked activity in behalf of the various presidential candidates. Boomers of former Senator Burton, in the persons of the republicans of the Ohio delegations, gave him a big dinner last night, and gave impetus to his campaign. At the same time workers for Root, Fairbanks, Cummins, Sherman, Weeks and Borah are active.

The fact that former Vice President Fairbanks has come to Washington, and his keeping close eye personally on developments when the national committee is about to meet, and also that former Senator Root is here talking things over with his friends, is looked on as denoting the mapping out of plans for their respective candidacies.

EMPEROR RECALLS GERMAN ATTACHES

Kaiser Personally Asks Safe Conduct For Boy-ed and Von Papen as Well as Their Successors.

Washington, Dec 13.—Emperor William has personally withdrawn Captains Boy-ed and Von Papen, the naval and military attaches of the German embassy here and has made a personal request that the United States secure safe conducts for them and their successors. This was formally announced late yesterday by Secretary Lansing.

There was much satisfaction in official circles at the prompt action taken by Emperor William and at the outcome of a situation which for a time appeared to be threatened with serious difficulties. Count von Bernstorff's manner as he left the state department reflected his own apparent gratification.

It was learned that there was a possibility for further diplomatic correspondence on the subject of the withdrawal of the attaches. While the reasons given by the United States for its request were accepted as satisfactory because any objection on the part of the American government to the attaches would render their continued presence undesirable, the German government may see fit to address a communication to the United States stating that it does not find itself able to agree that the attaches conducted themselves in a manner which would give offense.

Secretary Lansing will immediately ask Great Britain and France, through their embassies here, for safe conduct for Captains Boy-ed and von Papen, respectively, naval and military attaches of the German embassy here.

There was some speculation here today, as to whether Great Britain and France, in event the two German attaches leave this country, demand that they go under parole, pledging themselves not to participate in the European war.

YOUNG AMERICAN WITH BRITISH FLYERS HURT

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 11.—Theodore Marburg, former United States minister to Belgium has been notified by the British war office that his son, Lieut. Theodore Marburg, of the Royal Flying corps of the British army, was wounded in the head and leg in an engagement on the French battle line December 7.

Mr. Marburg left for New York today and will sail on the steamship Lafayette to join his son.

Document Demanding Disavowal of Ancona Attack Delivered to Austria.

Washington Dec 13.—The American note to Austria-Hungary demanding a disavowal of the sinking of the Italian steamer Ancona, and reparation for American lives lost on that vessel, reached the Austro foreign office at Vienna yesterday. The text will be given out by the state department here for publication in Monday morning newspapers.

WORK OF REBUILDING POWDER TOWN BEGUN

Hopewell to Rise From Its Ashes—Relief Work Is Well In Hand.

Petersburg, Va., Dec. 11.—While Hopewell was beginning to rise from its ashes today a committee of its citizens applied at Prince George courthouse for a town charter. Although the community had a population estimated at 27,000 before the disastrous fire on Thursday, it never had been incorporated.

Governor Stuart had not acted upon the request of the citizens formulated at a mass meeting that the military remain in control until a charter was granted.

Petersburg today was caring for 700 persons made destitute by the fire and upwards of 10,000 were being fed at Hopewell by the Petersburg relief committee. Two carloads of food stuffs were sent to Hopewell this morning.

The authorities continued their investigation into the cause of the fire. Reports that they were proceeding on the theory that the fire was of incendiary origin could not be confirmed.

ATTACHMENTS FILED ON HUGO CIRCUS OUTFIT

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Dec. 11.—Writs of attachment aggregating $1,900 were filed by local merchants today against the Hugo Bros. circus, which is in winter quarters in Cedar Rapids. The circus is owned by Vic Hugo, former manager of the Majestic theater, who left the city Thursday, following a confession by George Medhurst, treasurer for the Majestic company, that he and Hugo had embezzled $20,000 of the theater funds.

WOODS MAY LOSE OUT AS NATIONAL CHAIRMAN

Washington, Dec. 11.—Strong opposition has sprung up to Chairman Frank Woods, of the republican congressional committee. He may not be reelected as chairman when the committee reorganizes. Just who will be centered on by the opposition is not yet certain. It is possible Representative McKinley, of Illinois, former chairman will be chosen.

PEACE PLEA MADE BY BERLIN CROWD

Germans Gather Outside Reichstag and Stage Demonstration Is Report—Paris Views Differ.

London, Dec. 13.—A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company from Copenhagen, says it is reported that a peace demonstration of large proportions occurred outside the reichstag in Berlin, Thursday evening.

"Several thousand persons," says the dispatch, "endeavored to force their way into the reichstag. The crowds blocked the streets and stopped the street cars and busses and the police were three hours in restoring order. All the time the crowds kept up cries of 'peace' and even went so far as to use insulting language toward the royal house."

Paris, Dec. 11. — Paris newspapers express the opinion that behind the outspoken remarks of Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, German chancellor in his address to the reichstag, may be perceived a desire for peace.

"Germany's plan is evident," says Gabriel Hanotaux, former minister, in the Figaro. "While the chancellor rattles the sabre and proclaims Germany's undiminished strength and determination to win the socialists are put up to feel the ground for peace proposals, through their international connections in neutral countries."

The Matin asserts the chancellor, notwithstanding his great ability, has failed to hide the truth concerning Germany's straits.

"The idea that Germany could lack anything suggested astonishing revelations to him," it says. "We learn that our enemies have such fabulous quantities of potatoes that three-quarters of them are used for purposes other than food.

"Naturally the situation in the Balkans is exploited. The fraternity in arms with the Bulgarians and Turks is celebrated with deep emotion, but what Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg did not say is that Germany's allies are becoming so expensive to her that exchange with both America and Switzerland is falling against her daily in appalling proportions."

In the Petit Journal, Stephen Pichon, former foreign minister draws the conclusion from the chancellor's speech that both sides are equally determined to continue the struggle.

THIEF ESCAPES WITH JEWEL COLLECTION

Enters Chicago Art Institute Through Skylight and Gets Gems Worth $50,000.

Chicago, Dec. 11.—Eluding three watchmen, guarding the building, a thief gained entrance to the Art institute of Chicago on Michigan boulevard early today and escaped with a collection of rare jewels valued at between $35,000 and $50,000.

The collection was the gift of K. La Verne W. Noyes, a Chicago manufacturer, in memory of his late wife. It was made up of five pieces, all of ancient French make. It included a necklace of diamonds and opals, a brooch of diamonds, earrings, a watch, buckle and pendant of opals.

Entrance was gained through a skylight on the roof of the building. The thief lowered himself with a rope, made his way to the north wing of the building, pried up a glass case containing the collection and retraced his steps.

Sec. Newton H. Carpenter, of the institute said that the intrinsic value of the stolen jewels was between $10,000 and $15,000, but that their associations and probable historical value might bring their worth up to the higher estimate.

CURE THAT WAS PERMANENT

Farmer Had No More Thought of Being Afflicted With Cattle Plague After That.

A farmer who had lost some cows by the cattle plague was fully persuaded that he had himself been attacked by the epidemic. Forthwith he hurried off and consulted his medical man, who tried to laugh him out of the absurd notion, but to no purpose.

The farmer then went to an old, well-known practitioner, who, being a bit of a wag and seeing how matters stood, entered minutely into the details of the case, expressed his concurrence with the patient's views, and told him he could cure him.

The doctor thereupon wrote a prescription, sealed it up, and told the farmer to go to a druggist in the next town.

The farmer lost no time in going with the prescription, but was somewhat startled when the druggist showed him the formula, which ran thus:

"This man has the cattle plague. Take him into the back yard and shoot him, according to law."

Fool for Luck.

"Jones is a lucky dog. He got a quiet tip yesterday to plunge on X. Y. Z. preferred."

"Why, that stock dropped 20 points this morning. Where does Jones' luck come in?"

"He didn't have money enough to go in on it."

Busy.

"Please, Mrs. Brown," said the little girl from the house next door, "mother says would you be kind enough to come over and take care of baby for a little while?"

"Why, certainly," replied Mrs. Brown. "Is your mother ill?"

"No'm, but she's writing a paper on 'The Proper Care of Infants,' and she's afraid she won't be able to get it done in time to read before the Mothers' club tomorrow afternoon."

Big Chance Both Ways.

The famous physician and the eminent clergyman were deep in a discussion which threatened to become acrimonious.

"You see," said the minister sarcastically, "you medical men know so much about the uncertainties of this world that I would think you would not want to live."

"Oh, I don't know," responded the physician caustically. "You clergymen tell us so much about the uncertainties of the next world that we don't want to die."—Ladies' Home Journal.

THE VERY TIME
When Powerful Food Is Most Needed.

The need of delicate yet nutritious food is never felt so keenly as when a convalescent gets a set back on account of weak stomach. Then is when Grape-Nuts shows its power for it is a most scientific and easily digested food.

"About a year ago," writes a Kansas woman, "my little six-year-old niece left the invigorating and buoyant air of Kansas, where all her life she had enjoyed fairly good health, to live in Ohio. She naturally had a change of diet and of course a change of water, and somehow she contracted typhoid fever.

"After a long siege her case seemed hopeless, doctors gave her up, and she was nothing but skin and bones, couldn't eat anything and for weeks did not know even her father or mother. Her parents, in trying to get something delicate and nourishing that she could eat, finally hit upon Grape-Nuts food and it turned out to be just the thing.

"She seemed to relish it, was soon conscious of her surroundings and began to gain strength so rapidly that in a short time she was as well, playful and robust as if she had never been ill.

"We all feel that Grape-Nuts was the predominating factor in saving the sweet little girl's life."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

IF BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if Kidneys feel like lead or Bladder bothers you—Meat forms uric acid.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in urine so it no longer irritates, causing bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thereby avoiding serious complications.

A well known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe they are having kidney trouble while it is only bladder trouble

Look young! Common garden Sage and Sulphur darkens so naturally nobody can tell Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and abundant with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair fell out or looked dull, faded or streaked she would make this mixture and the use would bring back wonderful effect. Nowadays any druggist here for "Wyeths Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old time recipe, ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair as it is splendid for dandruff, dry, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and abundant.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Wilson Voices Policy of Pan-Americanism, Urges Defense Measures, Investigation of Railway Problems, Vocational Education and Requests Laws to Punish Seditious Americans and Troublesome Aliens.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 7.—President Wilson today in his annual message to congress explained American ideals with reference to the future, spoke of the need of stronger defense in order to uphold the Monroe doctrine and touched upon internal problems. He specifically scored the un-American actions of some citizens and the activitives of certain aliens and requested the enactment of laws to punish offenders. The message follows:

Gentlemen of the Congress Since I last had the privilege of addressing you on the state of the union the war of nations on the other side of the sea, which had then only begun to disclose its portentous proportions, has extended its threatening and sinister scope until it has swept within its flame some portion of every quarter of the globe, not excepting our own hemisphere, has altered the whole face of international affairs, and now presents a prospect of reorganization and reconstruction such as statesmen and peoples have never been called upon to attempt before.

We have stood apart, studiously neutral. It was our manifest duty to do so. Not only did we have no part or interest in the policies which seem to have brought the conflict on. It was necessary, if a universal catastrophe was to be avoided, that a limit should be set to the sweep of destructive war and that some part of the great family of nations should keep the processes of peace alive, if only to prevent collective economic ruin and the breakdown throughout the world of the industries by which its populations are fed and sustained. It was manifestly the duty of the self governed nations of this hemisphere to redress, if possible, the balance of economic loss and confusion in the other, if they could do nothing more. In the day of readjustment and recuperation, we earnestly hope and believe that they can be of infinite service

New U. S. Relationships.

In this neutrality, to which they were bidden not only by their separate life and their habitual detachment from the politics of Europe, but also by a clear perception of international duty, the states of America have become conscious of a new and more vital community of interest and moral partnership in affairs, more clearly conscious of the many common sympathies and interests and duties which bid them stand together

There was a time in the early days of our own great nation and of the republics fighting their way to independence in Central and South America when the government of the United States looked upon itself as in some sort the guardian of the republics to the south of her as against any encroachments or efforts at political control from the other side of the water; felt it its duty to play the part even without invitation from them, and I think that we can claim that the task was undertaken with a true and disinterested enthusiasm for the freedom of the Americas and the unmolested self government of her independent peoples. But it was always difficult to maintain such a role without offense to the pride of the peoples whose freedom of action we sought to protect, and without provoking serious misconceptions of our motives, and every thoughtful man of affairs must welcome the altered circumstances of the new day in whose light we now stand, when there is no claim of guardianship or thought of wards, but, instead, a full and honorable association as of partners between ourselves and our neighbors, in the interest of all America, north and south Our concern for the independence and prosperity of the states of Central and South America is not altered We retain unabated the spirit that has inspired us throughout the whole life of our government and which was so frankly put into words by President Monroe. We still mean always to make a common cause of national independence and of politica liberty in America. But that purpose is now better understood so far as it concerns ourselves. It is known not to be a selfish purpose. It is known to have in it no thought of taking advantage of any government in this hemisphere or playing its political fortunes for our own benefit. All the governments of America stand, so far as we are concerned, upon a footing of genuine equality and unquestioned independence.

Mexico and Liberty.

We have been put to the test in the case of Mexico, and we have stood the test. Whether we have benefited Mexico by the course we have pursued remains to be seen. Her fortunes are in her own hands. But we have at least proved that we will not take advantage of her in her distress and undertake to impose upon her an order and government of our own choosing. Liberty is often a fierce and intractable thing, to which no bounds can be set, and to which no bounds of a few men's choosing ought ever to be set. Every American who has drunk at the true fountains of principle and tradition must subscribe without reservation to the high doctrine of the Virginia bill of rights, which in the great days in which our government was set up was everywhere amongst us accepted as the creed of free men That doctrine is: "That government is, or ought to be, instituted for the common benefit, protection, and security of the people, nation, or community," that "of all the various modes and forms of government, that is the best which is capable of producing the greatest degree of happiness and safety, and is most effectually secured against the danger of maladministration, and that, when any government shall be found inadequate or contrary to these purposes, a majority of the community hath an indubitable, inalienable and indefeasible right to reform, alter or abolish it, in such manner as shall be judged most conducive to the public weal." We have unhesitatingly applied that heroic principle to the case of Mexico, and now hopefully await the rebirth of the troubled republic, which had so much of which to purge itself and so little sympathy from any outside quarter in the radical but necessary process. We will aid and befriend Mexico, but we will not coerce her, and our course with regard to her ought to be sufficient proof to all America that we seek no political suzerainty or selfish control.

No Rivalry in Americas.

The moral is, that the states of America are not hostile rivals, but cooperating friends, and that their growing sense of community of interest, alike in matters political and in matters economic, is likely to give them a new significance as factors in international affairs and in the political history of the world It presents them as in a very deep and true sense a unit in world affairs, spiritual partners, standing together because thinking together, quick with common sympathies and common ideals. Separated they are subject to all the cross currents of the confused politics of a world of hostile rivalries; united in spirit and purpose they cannot be disappointed of their peaceful destiny.

This is Pan-Americanism. It has none of the spirit of empire in it. It is the embodiment, the effectual embodiment, of the spirit of law and independence and liberty and mutual service

A very notable body of men recently met in the city of Washington, at the invitation and as the guests of this government, whose deliberations are likely to be looked back to as marking a memorable turning point in the history of America. They were representatives spokesmen of the several independent states of this hemisphere and were assembled to discuss the financial and commercial relations of the republics of the two continents which nature and political fortune have so intimately linked together. I earnestly recommend to your perusal the reports of their proceedings, and of the actions of their committees. You will get from them, I think, a fresh conception of the ease and intelligence and advantage with which Americans of both continents may draw together in practical cooperation and of what the material foundations of this hopeful partnership of interest must consist—of how we should build them and of how necessary it is that we should hasten their building.

Destiny of Americas.

There is, I venture to point out, an especial significance just now attaching to this whole matter of drawing the Americas together in bonds of honorable partnership and mutual advantage because of the economic readjustments which the world must inevitably witness within the next generation, when peace shall have at last resumed its healthful tasks. In the performance of these tasks I believe the Americas to be destined to play their parts together. I am interested to fix your attention on this prospect now because unless you take it within your view and permit the full significance of it to command your thought I cannot find the right light in which to set forth the particular matter that lies at the very front of my whole thought, as I address you today. I mean national defense.

Ideals of Democracy.

No one who really comprehends the spirit of the great people for whom we are appointed to speak, can fail to perceive that their passion is for peace, their genius best displayed in the practice of the arts of peace. Great democracies are not belligerent. They do not seek or desire war. Their thought is of individual liberty and of the free labor that supports life and the uncensored thought that quickens it. Conquest and dominion are not in our reckoning, or agreeable to our principles. But just because we demand unmolested development and the undisturbed government of our own lives upon our own principles, of right and liberty, we resent from whatever quarter it may come, the aggression we ourselves will not practice. We insist upon security in prosecuting our self chosen lines of national development. We do more than that. We demand it also for others. We do not confine our enthusiasm for individual liberty and free national development to the incidents and movements of affairs which affect only ourselves. We feel it wherever there is a people that tries to walk in these difficult paths of independence and right. From the first we have made common cause with all partisans of liberty on this side the sea, and have deemed it as important that our neighbors should be free from all outside domination as that we ourselves should be, have set America aside as a whole for the uses of independent nations and political freemen.

Can't Depend on Farmers.

Out of such thoughts grow all our policies. We regard war merely as a means of asserting the rights of a people against aggression And we are as fiercely jealous of coercive or dictatorial power within our own nation as of aggression from without We will not maintain a standing army except for uses which are as necessary in times of peace as in times of war, and we shall always see to it that our military peace establishment is no larger than is actually and continuously needed for the uses of days in which no enemies move against us. But we do believe in a body of free citizens ready and sufficient to take care of themselves and of the governments which they have set up to serve them. In our constitutions themselves we have commanded that "the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed," and our confidence has been that our safety in times of danger would lie in the rising of the nation to take care of itself, as the farmers rose at Lexington

Must Understand War.

But war has never been a mere matter of men and guns. It is a thing of disciplined might. If our citizens are ever to fight effectively upon a sudden summons, they must know how modern fighting is done, and what to do when the summons comes to render themselves immediately available and immediately effective. And the government must be their servant in this matter, must supply them with the training they need to take care of themselves and of it. The military arm of their government, which they will not allow to direct them, they may properly use to serve them and make their independence secure—and not their own independence merely but the rights also of those with whom they have made common cause, should they also be put in jeopardy. They must be fitted to play the great role in the world, and particularly in this hemisphere, for which they are qualified by principle and by chastened ambition to play

It is with these ideals in mind that the plans of the department of war for more adequate national defense were conceived which will be laid before you, and which I urge you to sanction and put into effect as soon as they can be properly scrutinized and discussed. They seem to me the essential first steps, and they seem to me for the present sufficient.

Proposed Army Increase.

They contemplate an increase of the standing force of the regular army from its present strength of 5,023 officers and 102,085 enlisted men of all services to a strength of 7,136 officers and 134,707 enlisted men, or 141,843, all told, all services, rank and file, by the addition of 52 companies of coast artillery, 15 companies of engineers, 10 regiments of infantry, four regiments of field artillery, and four aero squadrons, besides 750 officers required for a great variety of extra service, especially the all important duty of training the citizen force of which I shall presently speak, 792 non-commissioned officers for service in drill, recruiting and he like, and the necessary quota of enlisted men for the quartermaster corps, the hospital corps, the ordnance department, and other similar auxiliary services. These are the additions necessary to render the army adequate for its present duties duties which it has to perform not only upon our own continental coasts and borders and at our interior army posts, but also in the Philippines, in the Hawaiian islands, at the isthmus and in Porto Rico.

By way of making the country ready to assert some part of its real power promptly and upon a larger scale, should occasion arise, the plan also contemplates supplementing the army by a force of 400,000 disciplined citizens, raised in increments of 133,000 a year throughout a period of three years. This it is proposed to do by a process of enlistment under which the serviceable men of the country would be asked to bind themselves to serve with the colors for purposes of training for short periods throughout three years, and to come to the colors at call at any time throughout an additional "furlough" period of three years. This force of 400,000 men would be provided with personal accoutrements as fast as enlisted and their equipment for the field made ready to be supplied at any time. They would be assembled for training at stated intervals at convenient places in association with suitable units of the regular army. Their period of annual training would not necessarily exceed two months in the year

It would depend upon the patriotic feeling of the younger men of the country whether they responded to such a call to service or not. It would depend upon the patriotic spirit of the employers of the country whether they made it possible for the younger men in their employ to respond under favorable conditions or not. I, for one, do not doubt the patriotic devotion either of our young men or of those who give them employment—those for whose benefit and protection they would in fact enlist. I would look forward to the success of such an experiment with entire confidence.

At least so much by way of preparation for defense seems to me to be absolutely imperative now. We can not do less.

New Naval Plan.

The program which will be laid before you by the secretary of the navy is similarly conceived. It involves only a shortening of the time within which plans long matured shall be carried out; but it does make definite and explicit a program which has heretofore been only implicit, held in the minds of the committees on naval affairs and disclosed in the debates of the two houses, but nowhere formulated or formally adopted. It seems to me very clear that it will be to the advantage of the country for the congress to adopt a comprehensive plan for puting the navy upon a final footing of strength and efficiency and to press that plan to completion within the next five years. We have always looked to the navy of the country as our first and chief line of defense; we have always seen it to be our manifest course of prudence to be strong on the seas. Year by year we have been creating a navy which now ranks very high indeed among the navies of the maritime nations. We should now definitely determine how we shall complete what we have begun, and how soon.

The program to be laid before you contemplates the construction within five years of 10 battleships, six battle cruisers, 10 scout cruisers, 50 destroyers, 15 fleet submarines, 85 coast submarines, four gunboats, one hospital ship, two ammunition ships, two fuel oil ships and one repair ship. It is proposed that of this number we shall the first year provide for the construction of two batleships, two battle cruisers, three scout cruisers, 15 destroyers, five fleet submarines, 25 coast submarines, two gunboats, and one hospital ship; the second year, two batleships, one scout cruiser, 10 destroyers, four fleet submarines, 15 coast submarines, one gunboat, and one fuel oil ship, the third year, two battleships, one battle cruiser, two scout cruisers, five destroyers, two fleet submarines, and 15 coast submarines, the fourth year, two battleships, two battle cruisers, two scout cruisers, 10 destroyers, two fleet submarines, 15 coast submarines, one ammunition ship, and one fuel oil ship, and the fifth year, two battleships, one battle cruiser, two scout cruisers, 10 destroyers, two fleet submarines, 15 coast submarines, one gunboat, one ammuntion ship, and one repair ship.

More Men Needed.

The secretary of the navy is asking also for the immediate addition to the personnel of the navy of 7,500 sailors, 2,500 apprentice seamen, and 1,500 marines. This increase would be sufficient to care for the ships which are to be completed within the fiscal year 1917, and also for the number of men which must be put in training to man the ships which will be completed early in 1918. It is also necessary that the number of midshipmen at the naval academy at Annapolis should be increased by at least 300 in order that the force of officers should be more rapidly added to; and authority is asked to appoint, for engineering duties only, approved graduates of engineering colleges, and for service in the aviation corps a certain number of men taken from civil life.

If this full program should be carried out we should have built or building in 1921, according to the estimates of survival and standards of classification followed by the general board of the department, an effective navy consisting of 27 battleships, of the first line, six battle cruisers, 25 battleships of the second line, 10 armored cruisers, 13 scout cruisers five first class cruisers, three second class cruisers, 10 third class cruisers, 108 destroyers, 18 fleet submarines, 157 coast submarines, six monitors, 20 gunboats, four supply ships, 15 fuel ships, four transports, three tenders to torpedo vessels, eight vessels of special types, and two ammunition ships. This would be a navy fitted to our needs and worthy of our traditions.

U. S. Merchant Marine.

But armies and instruments of war are only part of what has to be considered if we are to consider the supreme matter of national self-sufficiency and securit in all its aspects. There are other great matters which will be thrust upon our attention whether we will or not There is, for example, a very pressing question of trade and shipping involved in this great problem of national adequacy It is necessary for many weighty reasons of national efficiency and development that we should have a great merchant marine. The great merchant fleet we once used to make us rich, that great body of sturdy sailors who used to carry our flag into every sea, and who were the pride and often the bulwark of the nation, we have almost driven out of existence by inexcusable neglect and indifference and by a hopelessly blind and provincial policy of so-called economic protection. It is high time we repaired our mistake and resumed our commercial independence on the seas.

Why Ships Are Needed.

For it is a question of independence. If other nations go to war or seek to hamper each other's commerce, our merchants, it seems, are at their mercy, to do with as they please. We must use their ships, and use them as they determine. We have not ships enough of our own. We cannot handle our own commerce on the seas. Our independence is provincial, and is only on land and within our own borders. We are not likely to be permitted to use even the ships of other nations in rivalry of their own trade, and are without means to extend our commerce even where the doors are wide open and our goods desired. Such a situation is not to be endured. It is of capital importance not only that the United States should be its own carrier on the seas and enjoy the economic independence which only an adequate merchant marine would give it, but also that the American hemisphere as a whole should enjoy a like independence and self-efficiency, if it is not to be drawn into the tangle of European affairs. Without such independence the whole question of our political unity and self determination is very seriously clouded and complicated indeed.

Moreover, we can develop no true or effective American policy without ships of our own—not ships of war, but ships of peace, carrying goods and carrying much more; creating friendships and rendering indispensable services to all interests on this side of the water They must move constantly back and forth between the Americas. They are the only shuttles that can weave the delicate fabric of sympathy, comprehension, confidence, and mutual dependence in which we wish to clothe our policy of America for Americans.

Remove the Obstacles.

The task of building up an adequate merchant marine for America private capital must ultimately undertake and achieve, as it has undertaken and achieved every other like task amongst us in the past, with admirable enterprise, intelligence, and vigor; and it seems to me a manifest dictate of wisdom that we should promptly remove every legal obstacle that may stand in the way of this much to be desired revival of our old independence and should facilitate in every possible way the building, purchase, and American registration of ships. But capital cannot accomplish this great task of a sudden. It must embark upon it by degrees, as the opportunities of trade develop. Something must be done at once; done to open routes and develop opportunities where they are as yet undeveloped; done to open the arteries of trade where the currents have not yet learned to run—especially between the two American continents, where they are, singularly enough yet to be created and quickened; and it is evident that only the government can undertake such beginnings and assume the initial financial risks. When the risk has passed and private capital begins to find its way in sufficient abundance into these new channels, the government may withdraw. But it cannot omit to begin. It should take the first steps, and should take them at once. Our goods must not lie piled up at our ports and stored upon sidetracks in freight cars which are daily needed on the roads; must not be left without means of transport to any foreign quarter We must not await the permission of foreign shipowners and foreign governments to send them where we will.

What Is Proposed.

With a view to meeting these pressing necessities of our commerce and naval [illegible] ourselves at the earliest possible moment of the present unparalled opportunity of linking the two Americas together in bonds of mutual interest and service, an opportunity which may never return again if we miss it now, proposals will be made to the present congress for the purchase or construction of ships to be owned and directed by the government similar to those made to the last congress, but modified in some essential particulars. I recommend these proposals to you for your prompt acceptance with the more confidence because every month that has elapsed since the former proposals were made has made the necessity for such action more and more manifestly imperative. That need was then foreseen; it is now acutely felt and everywhere realized by those for whom trade is waiting but who can find no conveyance for their goods. I am not so much interested in the particulars of the program as I am in taking immediate advantage of the great opportunity which awaits us if we will but act in this emergency. In this matter, as in all others, a spirit of common counsel should prevail, and out of it should come an early solution of this oressing problem.

Insular Problems.

There is another matter which seems to me to be very intimately associated with the question of national safety and preparation for defense. That is our policy towards the Philippines and the people of Porto Rico. Our treatment of them and their attitude towards us are manifestly of the first consequence in the development of our duties in the world and in getting a free hand to perform those duties. We must be free from every unnecessary burden or embarrassment; and there is no better way to be clear of embarrassment than to fulfil our promises and promote the interests of those dependent on us to the utmost Bills for the alteration and reform of the government of the Philippines and for rendering fuller political justice to the people of Porto Rico were submited to the Sixty-third congress. They will be submited also to you. I need not particularize their details. You are most of you already familiar with them. But I do recommend them to your early adoption with the sincere conviction that there are few measures you could adopt which would more serviceably clear the way for the great policies by which we wish to make good, now and always, our right to lead in enterprises of peace and good will and economic and political freedom.

The plans for the armed forces of the nation which I have outlined, and for the general policy of adequate preparation for mobilization and defense, involve of course very large additional expenditures of money—expenditures which will considerably exceed the estimated revenues of the government. It is made my duty by law, whenever the estimates of expenditure exceed the estimates of revenue, to call the attention of the congress to the fact and suggest any means of meeting the deficiency that it may be wise or possible for me to suggest. I am ready to believe that it would be my duty to do so in any case, and I feel particularly bound to speak of the matter when it appears that the deficiency will arise directly out of the adoption by the congress of measures which I myself urge it to adopt. Allow me, therefore, to speak briefly of the present state of the treasury and of the fiscal problems which the next year will probably disclose.

Problems of Revenue.

On the 13th of June, last, there was an available balance in the general fund of the treasury of $104,170,105.78. The total estimated receipts for the year 1916, on the assumption that the emergency revenue measure passed by the last congress will not be extended beyond its present limit, the 31st of December, 1915, and that the present duty of 1 cent per pound on sugar will be discontinued after the first of May, 1916, will be $670,365,500. The balance of June last and these estimated revenues come therefore, to a grand total of $774,535,605 78 The total estimated disbursements for the present fiscal year, including $25,000,000 for the Panama canal, $12,000,000 for probable deficiency appropriations, and $50,000 for miscellaneous debt redemptions, will be $753,891,000, and the balance in the general fund of the treasury will be reduced to $20,644,605.78. The emergency revenue act, if continued beyond its present time limitation, would produce, during the half year then remaining, about $41,000,000. The duty of 1 cent per pound on sugar, if continued, would produce during the two months of the fiscal year remaining after the first of May, about $15,000,000. These two sums, amounting together to $56,000,000 if added to the revenue of the second half of the fiscal year, would yield the treasury at the end of the year an available balance of $76,644,605 78.

The additional revenues required to carry out the program of military and naval preparation of which I have spoken, would as at present estimated, be for the fiscal year 1917 $93,800,000. Those figures, taken with the figures for the present fiscal year which I have already given, disclose our financial problem for the year 1917 Assuming that the taxes imposed by the emergency revenue act and the present duty on sugar are to be discontinued, and that the balance at the close of the present fiscal year will be only $20,644,605.78, that the disbursements for the Panama canal will again be about $25,000,000, and that the additional expenditures for the army and navy are authorized by the congress, the deficit in the general fund of the treasury on the 13th of June, 1917, will be nearly $235,000,000. To this sum at least $50,000,000 should be added to represent a safe working balance for the treasury, and $12,000,000 mates in 1917, and these additions would make a total deficit of some $297,000,000. If the present taxes should be continued present taxes should be continued throughout this year and the next, however, there would be a balance in the treasury of some $76,600,000 at the end of the present fiscal year, and a deficit at the end of the next year of only some $50,000,000, or, reckoning in $62,000,000 for deficiency appropriations and a safe treasury balance at the end of the year, a total deficit of some $112,000,000. The obvious moral of the figures is that it is a plain counsel of prudence to continue all of the present taxes or their equivalents, and confine ourselves to the problem of providing $112,000,000 of new revenue rather than $297,000,000.

Must Pay as We Go.

How shall we obtain the new revenue? We are frequently reminded that there are millions of bonds which the treasury is authorized under existing law to sell to reimburse the sums paid out of current revenues for the construction of the Panama canal, and it is true that bonds to the amount of approximately $222,000,000 are now available for that purpose Prior to 1913 $134,631,980 of these bonds had actually been sold to recoup the expenditures at the isthmus, and now constitute a considerable item of the public deft. But I, for one, do not believe that the people of this country approve of postponing the payment of their bills. Borrowing money is short-sighted finance. It can be justified only when permanent things are to be accomplished which many generations will certainly benefit by and which it seems hardly fair that a single generation should pay for The objects we are now proposing to spend money for cannot be so classified, except in the sense that everything wisely done may be said to be done in the interest of posterity as well as in our own It seems to me a clear dictate of prudent statesmanship and frank finance that in what we are now, I hope, about to undertake we should pay as we go. The people of the country are entitled to know just what burdens of taxation they are to carry, and to know from the outset, now The new bills should be paid by internal taxation.

To what sources, then, shall we turn? This is so peculiarly a question which the gentlemen of the House of Representatives are expected under the constitution to propose an answer to that you will hardly expect me to do more than discuss it in very general terms. We should be following an almost universal example of modern governments if we were to draw the greater part or even the whole of the revenues we need from the income taxes. By somewhat lowering the present limits of exemption and the figure at which the surtax shall begin to be imposed, and by increasing, step by step throughout the present graduation, the surtax itself, the income taxes as at present apportioned would yield sums sufficient to balance the books of the treasury at the end of the fiscal year 1917 without anywhere making the burden unreasonably or oppressively heavy. The precise reckonings are fully and accurately set out in the report of the secretary of the treasury which will be immediately laid before you.

And there are many additional sources of revenue which can justly be resorted to without hampering the industries of the country or putting any too great charge upon individual expenditure. A tax of 1 per cent per gallon on gasoline and naptha would yield, at the present estimated production, $30,000,000; a tax of 10 cents per horse power on automobiles and internal explosion engines, $35,000,000; a stamp tax on bank checks, probably $10,000,000; a tax of 25 cents per ton on pig iron, $10,000,000; a tax of 50 cents per ton on fabricated iron and steel, probably $10,000,000. In a country of great industries like this it ought to be easy to distribute the burdens of taxation without making them anywhere bear too heavily or too exclusively upon any one set of persons or undertakings. What is clear, is, that the industry of this generation should pay the bills of this generation.

I have spoken to you today, gentlemen, upon a single theme, the thorough preparation of the nation to care for its own security and to make sure of entire freedom to play the impartial role in this hemisphere and in the world which we all believe to have been providentially assigned to it. I have had in my mind no thought of any immediate or particular danger arising out of our relations with other nations. We are at peace with all the nations of the world, and there is reason to hope that no question in controversy between this and other governments will lead to any serious breach of amicable relations, grave as some differences of attitude and policy have been and may yet turn out to be. I am sorry to say that the gravest threats against our national peace and safety have been uttered within our own borders. There are citizens of the United States, I blush to admit, born under other flags but welcomed under our generous naturalization laws to the full freedom and opportunity of America, who have poured the poison of disloyalty into the very arteries of our national life; who have sought to bring the authority and good name of our government into contempt, to destroy our industries wherever they thought it effective for their vindictive purposes to strike at them, and to debase our politics to the uses of foreign intrigue. Their number is not great as compared with the whole number of those sturdy hosts by which our nation has been enriched in recent generation out of virile foreign stocks, but it is great enough to have brought deep disgrace upon us and to have made it necessary that we should promptly make use of processes of law by which we may be purged of their corrupt distempers. America never witnessed anything like this before. It never dreamed it possible that men sworn into its own citizenship, men drawn out of great free stocks such as supplied some of the best and strongest elements of that little, but how heroic, nation that in a high day of old staked its very life to free itself from every entanglement that had darkened the fortunes of the older nations and set up a new standard here—that men of such origins and such free choices of allegiance would ever turn in malign reaction against the government and people who had welcome and nurtured them and seek to make this proud country once more a hotbed of European passion. A litle while ago such a thing would have seemed incredible. Because it was incredible we made no preparation for it. We would have been almost ashamed to prepare for it, as if we were suspicious of ourselves our own comrades and neighbors. But the ugly and incredible thing has actually come about and we are without adequate federal laws to deal with it. I urge you to enact such laws at the earliest possible moment and feel that in doing so I am urging you to do nothing less than save the honor and self respect of the nation. Such creatures of passion, disloyalty and anarchy must be crushed out. They are not many, but they are infinitely malignant, and the hand of our power should close over them at once. They have formed plots to destroy property, they have entered into conspiracies against the neutrality of the government, they have sought to pry into every confidential transaction of the government in order to serve interests alien to our own. It is possible to deal with these things very effectually. I need not suggest the terms in which they may be dealt with.

Disloyal Americans.

I wish that it could be said that only a few men, misled by mistaken sentiments of allegiance to the governments under which they were born, had been guilty of disturbing the self possession and misrepresenting the temper and principles of the country during these days of terrible war, when it would seem that every man who was truly an American would instinctively make it his duty and his pride to keep the scales of judgment even and prove himself a partisan of no nation but his own. But it cannot. There are some men among us, and many resident abroad who, though born and bred in the United States and calling themselves Americans, have so forgotten themselves and their honor as citizens as to put their passionate sympathy with one or the other side in the great European conflict above their regard for the peace and dignity of the United States. They also preach and practice disloyalty. No laws, I suppose, can reach corruptions of the mind and heart; but I should not speak of others without also speaking of these and expressing the even deeper humiliation and scorn which every self possessed and thoughtfully patriotic American must feel when he thinks of them and of the discredit they are daily bringing upon us.

Domestic Affairs.

While we speak of the preparation of the nation to make sure of her security and her effective power we must not fall into the patent error of supposing that her real strength comes from armaments and mere safeguards of written law. It comes, of course, from her people, their energy, their success in their undertakings, their free opportunity to use the natural resources of our great home land and of the lands outside our continental borders which look to us for protection, for encouragement, and for assistance in their development; from the organisation and freedom and vitality of our economic life. The domestic questions which engaged the attention of the last congress are more vital to the nation in this its time of test than at any other time. We cannot adequately make ready for any trial of our strength unless we wisely and promptly direct the force of our laws into these all-important fields of domestic action. A matter which it seems to me we should have very much at heart is the creation of the right instrumentalities by which to mobilize our economic resources in any time of national necessity. I take it for granted that I do not need your authority to call into systematic consultation with the directing officers of the army and navy men of recognized leadership and ability from among our citizens who are thoroughly familiar, for example, with the transportation facilities of the country and therefore competent to advise how they may be co-ordinated when the need arises, those who can suggest the best way in which to bring about prompt cooperation among the manufacturers of the country, should it be necessary, and those who could assist to bring the technical skill of the country to the aid of the government in the solution of particular problems of defense. I only hope that if I should find it feasible to constitute such an advisory body the congress would be willing to vote the small sum of money that would be needed to defray the expenses that would probably be necessary to give it the clerical and administrative machinery with which to do serviceable work.

Vocational Education.

What is more important is, that the industries and resources of the country should be available and ready for mobilization. It is the more imperatively necessary, therefore, that we should promptly devise means for doing what we have not yet done; that we should give intelligent federal aid and stimulation to industrial and vocational education, as we have long done in the large field of our agricultural industry; that, at the same time that we safeguard and conserve the natural resources of the country we should put them at the disposal of those who will use them promptly and intelligently, as was sought to be done in the admirable bills submitted to the last congress from its committees on the public lands, bills which I earnestly recommend in principle to your consideration; that we should put into early operation some provision for rural credits which will add to the extensive borrowing facilities already afforded the farmer by the reserve bank act adequate instrumentalities by which long credits may be obtained on land mortgages; and that we should study more carefully than they have hitherto been studied the right adaptation of our economic arrangements to changing conditions.

Many conditions about which we have repeatedly legislated are being altered from decade to decade, it is evident, under our very eyes and are likely to change even more rapidly and more radically in the days immediately ahead of us, when peace has returned to the world and the nations of Europe once more take up their tasks of commerce and industry with the energy of those who must [illegible] themselves to build anew. Just how these changes will be no one can confidently predict. These forces or [illegible] no calculable, because no stable, element in the problem The most we can do is to make certain that we have the necessary instrumentalities of information constantly at our service so that we may be sure that we know exactly what we are dealing with when we come to act. If it should be necessary to act at once We must first certainly know what it is that we are seeking to adapt ourselves to. I may ask the privilege of addressing you more at length on this important matter a little later in your session

Transportation Problem.

In the meantime may I make this suggestion? The transportation problem is an exceedingly serious and pressing one in this country There nas from time to time of late been reason to fear that the railroads would not much longer be able to cope with it successfully, as at present equipped and coordinated. I suggest that it would be wise to provide for a commission of inquiry to ascertain by a thorough canvass of the whole question whether our laws as at present framed and administered are as serviceable as they might be in the solution of the problem. It is obviously a problem that lies at the very foundation of our efficiency as a people. Such an inquiry ought to take out every circumstance and opinion worth considering and we need to have all sides of the matter if we mean to do anything in the field of federal legislation.

No one, I am sure, would wish to see any backward step The regulation of the railways of the country by federal commission has had admirable results and has fully justified the hopes and expectations of those by whom the principle of regulation was originally proposed. The question is not what should we do? It is, whether there is anything we can do that would supply us with effective means, in the very process of regulation, for bettering the conditions under which the rail roads are operated for making them more useful servants of the country as a whole. It seems to me that it might be the part of wisdom therefore, before further legislation in this field is attempted to look at the whole problem of coordination and efficiency in the full light of a fresh assessment of circumstance and opinion, to guide to dealing with the several parts of it.

For what we are seeking now, what my mind is the single thought of my message, is national efficiency and solidity. We serve a great nation. We must serve it in the spirit of its peculiar genius It is the genius of common men for government, industry, justice, liberty and peace. We should see to it that it is no instrument, no facility or vigor of power to make it sufficient to play its part in energy, safety and assured success. And this we are no partisans but heralds and prophets of a new age.

Boots for Russian Troops.

INDUSTRIAL POISONS.

A man who worked in a rubber factory spilled a can of aniline on his clothes. Two hours later he noticed that his cheeks were flushed and his heart was palpitating. He became dizzy, vomited serveral times, and had a violent headache His skin became increasingly dusky and five hours after spilling the aniline he became unconscious. He lay unconscious for nine hours.

This was an extra bad case of acute aniline poisoning. Around ruber plants sufferers from chronic slow aniline poisoning are known as blue men or blue boys because their skin is cyanotic—dusky Aniline poisoning in rubber works is on the decrease.

A man 34 years old has worked in a rubber clothing factory for six years. When he started to work at this trade he had an attack of acute lead poisoning He suffers now from pain in his abdomen back and legs He has lost his grip in his hands There is a lead line along his gums

This man worked in a room where both litharge and sublimated lead were used The air was full of lead dust It was impossible to keep lead dust from his hands.

Careless men working in an improperly run rubber plant are quite likely to develop lead poisoning Some of the men who work in rubber works breathe an atmosphere reeking with dust of golden sulphide of antimony.

The symptoms of antimony poison are pain in the abdomen d sentery attacks, sores in the mouth salivation wasting loss of appetite weak heart and attacks of dizziness Very few cases of antimony poisoning are on record

A man has been at work for several hours lipping a rubber glove forms into rubber dissolved in naphtha He became so dizzy that he had to quit and go home He staggered so that two men had to half carry him He became unconscious and remained so for several hours. He was in bed several hours. He was suffering from gassing from naphtha

Girls who get a naphtha jag grow very talkative and foolish and laugh a great deal

Rubber is dissolved in naphtha, benzine gasoline Workers in rubber sometimes become gassed from the fumes of these solvents

A Pole 18 years old applied rubber cement to the seams of rubber coats. He complained of being tired and weak, sleepy all the time, suffered from headache, could not work properly, especially in the morning because his muscles would twitch and shake.

This was about as definite a sign of chronic benzine poisoning as is found in the department of labor report on "Industrial Poison in the Rubber Industry," from which this material is drawn. The symptoms of chronic benzine poisoning are very vague.

A tire splicer worked for years at his trade. Suddenly he became maniacal and had to be sent to an asylum. He recovered rather promptly

The men who work in the fumes of carbon bisulphite used for dissolving rubber in certain processes are apt to "go crazy from the fumes" The attacks start in with excitement during which they talk foolishly and want to argue about irrelevant matters.

The danger is not very great The danger to workers in rubber seems to be in the main of two types—lead poisoning and aniline poisoning The danger from gassing is only moderately great The dangers of the industry can be wholly removed by better cleaning, especially with vacuum cleaners, better hood systems with more powerful exhausts, and better facilities for washing the hands.

KEEP THE DRAINS CLEAR.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

Very often the careless servant housewife or other member of the family causes a drain to become stopped And sometimes much dirt and gas accumulate and illness results

It is a difficult matter to clear a drain that has become clogged Sometimes it is necessary to call in the plumber for this work. But when it is clogged to this extent the drain is not so dangerous as when it is only partly clogged. In this state, the trouble is sometimes unsuspected, and yet great danger lurks hidden in the slightly clogged and therefore dirty pipe or drain

Prevention is better than cure in this case It is well to train yourself to throw nothing into the drains that could possibly cause trouble And children and grown ups in your family should all be warned of the dangers that follow burned matches, wads of hair or any other solids carelessly thrown into the wash basins or other drains

Of course, trouble is most likely to occur in the kitchen for down the kitchen sink drain quantities of refuse go every day Nothing but liquids should be poured down the kitchen drain Dish water should be poured through a strainer, and so should all water from vegetables, so that solids will be removed before the water reaches the drain pipe Coffee and tea grounds should never be thrown into the pipe—they should instead be thrown into the strainer standing conveniently in the sink

Grease is more likely to cause trouble than anything else Grease poured when hot into a cold pipe begins to harden and perhaps in a bend of the pipe causes a slight stoppage Then any bits of solid in the dish water are caught in the grease and held until finally a stoppage that chokes the drain occurs Then much work is necessary to clear the pipe again

So when there is liquid grease to throw away, pour it into a dish let it harden, and then throw it away with the rest of the kitchen refuse If you do throw liquid grease down the sink drain, let the hot water run after it for four or five minutes, or else pour several quarts of boiling water down

It is a very good plan every day or two to drop a piece of washing soda down the sink drain If possible, unfasten the strainer cap at the entrance to the pipe, as the soda discolors metal. Pour boiling water after the soda. Hot ammonia water and hot water in which borax has been dissolved are also good to keep the drain clean and sweet

When a stoppage does occur, first scoop up all water in the sink. Then pour some actively boiling water down the pipe, after dropping in a piece of soda. Bail out whatever accumulates in the sink and pour more boiling water down the pipe, repeating this until the drain is clear Then pour down more boiling water, with ammonia or soda, to clean the pipe thoroughly. If grease causes the stoppage, it is sometimes helpful to hold a pan of boiling water under a curve in the pipe to melt the grease within it.

An implosion, as the term indicates, is the direct opposite of an explosion. The conditions most favorable for the production of an implosion exist at great depth in the sea. At 2,500 fathoms the pressure is, roughly speaking, about two and a half tons to the square inch, a pressure that is several times greater than that exerted by steam upon the piston of a powerful engine.

THE GLOVED HAND

A Detective Story

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

Author of "The Holladay Case," "The Marathon Mystery," "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet," etc.

CHAPTER VI—(Continued.)

I stooped to raise the ladder to my shoulder when suddenly, cutting the darkness like a knife, came a scream so piercing, so vibrant with fear that I stood there crouching, every muscle rigid. Again the scream came, more poignant, more terrible, wrung from a woman's throat by the last extremity of horror and then a silence sickening and awful. What was happening in that silence?

I stood erect, gaping, suffocated, rising as from a long submersion Godfrey's finger had slipped from the button of his torch and we were in darkness but suddenly a dim figure hurled itself past us, up the ladder.

With a low cry, Godfrey snatched at it, but his hand clutched only the empty air The next instant, the figure poised itself on the coping of the wall and then plunged forward out of sight I heard the crash of breaking branches a scramble, a patter of feet, and all was still

"It's Swain!" said Godfrey, hoarsely, "and that's a 12 foot drop! Why the man's mad! Hand me that ladder, Lester!" he added, for he was already at the top of the wall

I lifted it, as I had done once before that night, and saw Godfrey slide it over the wall

"Come on!" he said "We must save him if we can!" and he, too, disappeared

The next instant I was scrambling desperately after him The lawyer Turnin had vanished!

CHAPTER VII

THE TRAGEDY

The wall was masked on the other side by a dense growth of shrubbery, and struggling through this, I found myself on the gravelled path where I had seen Marjorie Vaughan. Before me, along this path, sped a shadow which I knew to be Godfrey, and I followed at top speed. At the end of a moment, I caught a flash of light among the treet, and knew that we were nearing the house, but I saw no sign of Swain.

We came to the stretch of open lawn, crossed it, and, guided by the light, found ourselves at the end of a short avenue of trees. At the other end, a stream of light poured from an open door, and against that light a running figure was silhouetted. Even as I saw it, it bounded through the open door and vanished

"It's Swain!" gasped Godfrey, and then we, too, were at that open door

For an instant, I thought the room was empty. Then from behind the table in the centre, a demoniac, blood stained figure rose into view, holding in its arms a white robed woman. With a sort of nervous shock, I saw that the man was Swain, and the woman Marjorie Vaughan. A thrill of fear ran through me as I saw how her head fell backwards against her shoulder, how her arms hung limp.

Without so much as a glance in our direction, he laid her gently on a couch, fell to his knees beside it, and began to chafe her wrists.

It was Godfrey who mastered himself first, and who stepped forward to Swain's side.

"Is she dead?" he asked

Swain shook his head impatiently, without looking up.

"How is she hurt?" Godfrey persisted, bending closer above the unconscious girl.

Swain shot him one red glance.

"She's not hurt!" he said, hoarsely. "She has fainted—that's all. Go away."

But Godfey did not go away After one burning look at Swain's lowering face, he bent again above the still figure on the couch, and touched his fingers to the temples. What he saw or felt seemed to reassure him, for his voice was more composed when he spoke again

"I think you're right, Swain," he said. "But we'd better call someone"

"Call away!" snarled Swain.

"You mean there's no one here? Surely her father .."

He stopped, for at the words Swain had burst into a hoarse laugh.

"Her father!" he cried "Oh, yes, he's here! Call him! He's over there!"

He made a wild gesture toward a high backed easy chair beside the table, his eyes gleaming with an almost fiendish excitement, then the gleam faded, and he turned back to the girl.

Godfrey cast one astonished glance at him and strode to the chair I saw his face quiver with sudden horror, I saw him catch at the table for support, and for an instant he stood staring down. Then he turned stiffly toward me and motioned me to approach.

In the chair a man sat huddled forward—a gray haired man, clad in a white robe. His hands were gripping the chair arms as though in agony His head hung down almost upon his knees.

Silently Godfrey reached down and raised the head And a cry of horror burst from both of us.

The face was purple with congested blood, the tongue swollen and horribly protruding, the eyes suffused and starting from their sockets. And then, at a motion from Godfrey's finger, I saw that about his neck a cord was tightly knotted. The man had been strangled.

Godfrey, after a breathless moment in which he made sure that the man was quite dead, let the head fall forward again It turned me sick to see how low it sagged, how limp it hung. And I saw that the collar of the white robe was spotted with blood.

I do not know what was in Godfrey's mind, but, by a common impulse, we turned and looked at Swain. He was still on his knees beside the couch. Apparently he had forgotten our presence.

"It's plain enough," said Godfrey, his voice thick with emotion. "She came in and found the body. No wonder she screamed like that! But where are the servants? Where is everybody?"

The same thought was in my own mind. The utter silence of the house, the fact that no one came, added, somehow, to the horror of the moment. Those wild screams must have echoed from cellar to garret—and yet no one came!

Godfrey made a rapid scrutiny of the room, which was evidently the library, with a double door opening upon the grounds and another opposite opening into the hall. On the wall beside the inner door, he found an electric button, and he pushed it for some moments, but there was no response. If it rang a bell, the bell was so far away that we could not hear it.

A heavy curtain hung across the doorway Godfrey pulled it aside and peered into the hall beyond. The hall was dark and silent. With face decidedly grim, he took his torch from one pocket and his pistol from another "Come along, Lester," he said. "We've got to look into this. Have your torch ready—and your pistol God knows what further horrors this house contains.

He pulled back the curtain, so that the hall was lighted to some extent from the open doorway, and then was a broad one, running right through the centre of the house from front to rear Godfrey proceeded cautiously and yet rapidly the whole length of it, flashing his torch into every room. They were all luxuriously furnished, but were empty of human occupants. From the kitchen, which closed the hall at the rear, a flight of stone steps led down into the basement, and Godfrey descended these with a steadiness I could not but admire We found ourselves in a square, stone flagged room, evidently used as a laundry Two doors opened out of it but both were secured with heavy padlocks

"Store rooms or wine cellars, perhaps," Godfrey ventured, mounted the stairs again to the kitchen, and returned to the room whence we had started

Everything there was as we had left it. The dead man sat huddled forward in his chair Swain was still on his knees beside the coach' the girl had not stirred Godfrey went to the side of the coach, and, disregarding Swain's fierce glance, again placed his fingers on the girl's left temple Then he came back to me.

"If she doesn't revive pretty soon," he said, "we'll have to try heroic measures. But there must be somebody in the house. Let's look upstairs."

He led the way up the broad stairs, which rose midway of the hall, sending a long ray of light ahead of him I followed in no very happy frame of mind, for I confess that this midnight exploration of an unknown house, with a murdered man for its only occupant, was getting on my nerves. But Godfrey proceeded calmly and systematically.

The hall above corresponded to that below, with two doors on each side, opening into bedroom suites. The first was probably that of the master of the house. It consisted of bedroom, bath and dressing room, but there was no one there. The next was evidently Miss Vaughan's. It also had a bath and a daintily furnished boudoir, but these, too were empty

Then as we opened the door across the hall, a strange odor saluted us—an odor suggestive somehow of the east—which in the first moment, caught the breath from the throat, and in the second seemed to muffle and retard the beating of the heart.

A flash of Godfrey's torch showed that we were in a little entry, closed at the farther end by a heavy drapery. Godfrey strode forward and swept the drapery aside. The rush of perfume was overpowering, and through the opening came a soft glow of light.

It was a moment before I got my breath then a mist seemed to fall from before my eyes and a strange sense of exaltation and well being stole through me I saw Godfrey standing motionless, transfixed, with one hand holding back the drapery, and his torch hanging unused in the other, and I crept forward nd peered over his shoulder at the strangest scene I have ever gazed upon

Just in front of us, poised in the air some three feet from the floor, hung a sphere of crystal, glowing with a soft radiance which seemed to wax and wane, to quiver almost to darkness and then to burn more clearly It was like a dreamer's pulse, fluttering, pausing, leaping, in accord with his vision. And as I gazed at the sphere, I fancied I could see within it strange, elusive shapes, which changed and merged and faded from moment to moment, and yet always clearer and more suggestive. I bent forward, straining my eyes to see them better, to fathom their meaning

Godfrey, turning to speak to me, saw my attitude and shook me roughly by the arm.

"Don't do that, Lester!" he growled in my ear "Take your eyes off that crystal!"

I tried to move my eyes, but could not, until Godfrey pulled me around to face him I stood blinking at him stupidly

"I was nearly gone, myself, before I realized the danger," he said. "A sphere like that can hypnotise a man more quickly than anything else on earth, especially when his resistance is lessened, as it is by this heavy perfume"

"It was rather pleasant," I said. "I should like to try it some time."

"Well, you can't try it now. You've got something else to do. Besides, it has two victims already."

"Two victims?"

"Look carefully, but keep your eyes off the sphere," he said, and swung me around toward the room again.

The room was shrouded in impenetrable darkness, except for the faint and quivering radiance which the phere emitted, and as I plunged my eyes into its depths in an effort to see what lay there, it seemed to me that I had never seen blackness so black. As I stared into it, with straining eyes, a vague form grew dimly visible beside the glowing sphere; and then I recoiled a little, for suddenly it took shape and I saw it was a man.

I had a queer fancy, as I stood there, that it was really a picture into which I was gazing—one of Rembrandt's—for, gradually, one detail after another emerged from the darkness, vague shadows took on shape and meaning, but farther back there was always more shadow, and farther back still more.

The man was sitting cross legged on a low divan, his hands crossed in front of him and hanging limply between his knees. His clothing I could see but vaguely, for it was merged into the darkness about him, but his hands stood out white against it. He was staring straight at the crystal, with unwavering and unwinking gaze, and sat as motionless as though carved in stone. The glow from the sphere picked out his profile with a line of light—I could see the high forehead, the strong, curved nose, the full lips shaded by a faint mustache, and the long chin, only partially concealed by a close clipped beard. It was a wonderful and compelling face, especially as I then saw it, and I gazed at it for a long moment.

"It's the adept, I suppose," said Godfrey, no longer taking care to lower his voice.

It sounded unnaturally loud in the absolute stillness of the room, and I looked at the adept quickly, but he had not moved.

"Can't he hear you?" I asked.

"No—he couldn't hear a clap of thunder. That is, unless he's faking."

I looked again at the impassive figure.

"He's not faking," I said.

"I don't know," and Godfrey shook his head skeptically. "It looks like the real thing—but these fellows are mighty clever. Do you see the other victim? There's no fake about it!"

"I see no one else," I said, after a vain scrutiny.

"Look carefully on the other side of the sphere. Don't you see something there?"

My eyes were smarting under the strain, and for a moment longer I saw nothing, then a strange, grey shape detached itself from the blackness. It was an ugly and repulsive shape, slender below, but swelling hideously at the top, and as I stared as it, it seemed to me that it returned my stare with malignant eyes screened by a pair of white rimmed glasses. Then, with a sensation of dizziness, I saw that the shape was swaying gently back and forth, in a sort of rhythm And then, quite suddenly, I saw what it was, and a chill of horror quivered up my back It was a cobra.

To and fro it swung, to and fro, its staring eyes fixed upon the sphere, its spectacled hood hideously distended.

The very soul within me trembled as I gazed at those unwinking eyes What did they see in the sphere? What was passing in that inscrutable brain? Could it, too, reconstruct the past, read the mysteries of the future.

Some awful power, greater than my will seemed stretching its tentacles from the darkness I felt them dragging at me, certain, remorseless, growing stronger and stronger.

With something very like a shriek of terror, I tore myself away, out of the entry, into the hall, to the stairs, and down them into the lighted room below.

And as I stood there, gasping for breath, Godfrey followed me, and I saw that his face, too, was livid

CHAPTER VIII.

A FRESH ENIGMA.

Godfrey met my eyes with a little deprecating smile, put his torch in one pocket, took a handkerchief from another, and mopped his forehead.

"Rather nerve-racking, 'wasn't it, Lester?" he remarked, and then his gaze wandered to the couch, and he stepped toward it quickly.

I saw that a change had come in Miss Vauhan's condition. Her eyes were still closed, but her body no longer lay inert and lifeless, for from moment to moment it was shaken by a severe nervous tremor. Godfrey's face was very grave as he looked at her.

"Stop stroking her wrists, Swain," he said, "that does no good," and when Swain, without answering or seeming to hear, kept on stroking them, Godfrey drew the hands away, took Swain by the arm, and half-lifted him to his feet. "Listen to me," he said, more sternly, and shook him a little, for Swain's eyes were dull and vacant. "I want you to sit quietly in a chair for a while, till you get your senses back. Miss Vaughan is seriously ill and must not be disturbed in any way. I'm going to get a doctor and a nurse at once; they'll do what needs to be done. Until then, she must be left alone. Understand?"

Swain nodded vaguely, and permitted Godfrey to lead him to a chair near the outer door, where he sat down As his hand fell across the arm of the chair, I could see that a little blood was still oozing from the wound on the wrist. Godfrey saw it, too, and picked up the hand and looked at it. Then he laid it gently down again and glanced at his watch. I followed his example, and saw that it was 1:30.

"Have you nerve enough to stay here half an hour by yourself, Lester?" he asked

"By myself?" I echoed, and glanced at the dead man and at the quivering girl.

"I've got to run over to my place to get a few things and do some telephoning," he explained. "We must get a doctor up here at once; and then there's the police—I'll try to get Simmonds. Will you stay?"

"Yes," I said, "of course. But please get back as soon as you can."

"I will," he promised, and, after a last look around the room, stepped out upon the walk.

I went to the door and looked after him until the sounds of his foot steps died away. Then, feeling very lonely, I turned back into the room. Those regular tremors were still shaking the girl's body in a way that seemed to me most alarming, but there was nothing I could do for her, and I finally pulled a chair to Swain's side. He, at least, offered a sort of companionship. He was sitting with his head hanging forward in a way that reminded me most unpleasantly of the huddled figure by the table, and did not seem to be aware of my presence. I tried to draw him into talk, but a slight nod from time to time was all I could get from him, and I finally gave it up. Mechanically, my hand sought my coat pocket and got out my pipe—yes, that was what I needed; and, sitting down in the open doorway, I filled it and lighted up.

Get the Habit of Drinking Hot Water Before Breakfast

Says we can't look or feel right with the system full of poisons.

Millions of folks bathe internally now instead of loading their system with drugs. "What's an inside bath?" you say. Well, it is guaranteed to perform miracles if you could believe these hot water enthusiasts.

There are vast numbers of men and women who, immediately upon arising in the morning, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of lime stone phosphate in it. This is a very excellent health measure. It is intended to flush the stomach, liver, kidneys and the thirty feet of intestines of the previous day's waste, sour bile and indigestible material left over in the body which if not eliminated every day, becomes food for the millions of bacteria which infest the bowels, the quick result is poisons and toxins which are then absorbed into the blood causing headache, bilious attacks, foul breath, bad taste, colds, stomach trouble, kidney misery, sleeplessness, impure blood and all sorts of ailments.

People who feel good one day and badly the next, but who simply can not get feeling right are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store. This will cost very little but is sufficient to make anyone a real crank on the subject of internal sanitation.

Just as soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and freshening so limestone phosphate and hot water acts on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels. It is vastly more important to bathe on the inside than on the outside, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do.

As incontrovertable evidence of the strict neutrality of this paper we'll take your $1.00 and never ask if you be English, German, French, Austrian, Russian, Italian, Belgian, Jap, Turk, or the devil. But we believe the latter will have a firm hold on a number of our readers unless they come in and dig up pretty soon.

The basket social held in Dist. No. 5, German township last Friday evening was a hummer and the proceeds amounted to $50.00. The high baskets brought $12.00 and was a bidding match between the Klemme and Garner boys, the Klemme boys winning out. A fine program was also rendered, for which the teacher, Miss Johnston, deserves much credit.

Any of our readers who are planning on holding a farm sale are requested to send us in their sale dates which we will publish free of cost. Of course we would like to have the job of printing your sale advertising for this courtesy, but if you do not wish to give it to us we will gladly publish your sale date just the same. We are equipped to turn out a neat bill on short notice and would like an opportunity to do your work at a reasonable price. Come in and see us, use the telephone or write, we are at your service.

Look here you farmers. You can not afford to spread your manure by hand. The oats will lodge and you will tear the corn out by the roots either with your harrow or cultivator. This does not pay. Come in and buy a Flying Dutchman or Great Western manure spreader and do your work right and also raise a big crop of both oats and corn. We will give you a good deal and the best spreader made. KLEMME, IOWA

Sir Clements Robert Markham, explorer, traveler, archaeologist, who introduced the cultivation of the quinine yielding cinchona trees from Peru in British India, an act of incalculable value to the world at large, is now 85 years of age. For many years he held the presidency of the Royal Geographical society. His life has been one of travel and adventure, beginning with the navy in 1844. He served in the Arctic expedition of 1850-1851, and the following year left the navy. Then followed journeys of a scientific nature to Peru and Abyssinia, and in 1867 he became secretary of the India office. Many volumes of travels, history, and of a general character came from his pen, including the masterly "The Incas of Peru."

Gambia is Great Britain's smallest West Africa colony, having an area of only 3,619 square miles. Practically all the trade of the colony is in the hands of French merchants. The population is 146,101 (census of 1911.) Trade in Gambia is dependent almost entirely on the cultivation of peanuts, which have made the colony one of the richest in West Africa, and the only one out of debt, with a surplus of nearly $1,000,000 to its credit. It has suffered along with the sister colonies as a result of the war.

Miss Lydia B. Conley, of Kansas City, is the first woman of Indian descent to be admitted to practice law before the supreme court. Her admission was moved by Solicitor General Davis. Several years ago she attracted attention by resisting an attempt to romove the bodies of her ancestors from an Indian burial ground in Kansas City. She carried the litigation to the supreme court and there argued her own case She lost it, however. Her appearance was with special permission of the court.

The statement that "The Old Oaken Bucket" was inspired by a terrifically hot day can hardly be expected to arouse any weird gestures or lurid screams of indignant denial, especially since the author, Samuel Woodworth, son of a Massachusetts farmer, was born in 1785, and can scarcely be in a position to state his views of the case.

IOWA STATE NEWS.

WOMAN ASKS $10,000 FOR BROKEN WEDDING PROMISE

Webster City, Ia., Dec. 18.—Notice of suit has just been filed here for what is probably the largest amount of damages ever asked in a breach of promise case in Hamilton county. The plaintiff in the case is Miss Hattie Ahrends, who lives near Kamrar. She is suing Andrew Jensen, who lives near Jewell, for $10,000 because of his alleged failure to carry out his promise to marry her.

Both parties to the action are about 21 years of age and well known in the community where they reside. The position in which young Jensen finds himself is doubly unpleasant, owing to a criminal action pending against him in the district court in which Miss Jenson is the complaining witness. He is under indictment and is now on trial on this charge.

The civil action is separate and in no wise connected with the criminal proceedings. The criminal action—even if sustained—and affords the complaining witness no relief of a tangible kind. In the civil action she asks $10,000 damages, alleging that Jenson promised to marry her and that he has never kept that promise and that, in fact, he left the state to avoid carrying out his part of the agreement. The families of both the young people are prominent and the trial of both criminal and civil actions will attract unusual attention over Hamilton county.

YOUNG MEN ON TRIAL FOR MURDER OF RUFUS ULLERY

Winterset, Ia., Dec. 18.—The trial of George Frazier, 23 years old, charged with the murder of Rufus Ullery, a merchant at Webster, Ia., began here yesterday. Frazier's older brother, John, also faces trial here on the same charge. Ullery's body was found at the foot of a stairway leading to his store, with bullet wounds in his head and body. He had evidently been shot from above. A reward of $1,200 was offered for the arrest of the slayer. A stranger, in Webster the day before the crime, was traced through Sioux City, into the Dakotas, where the trail was lost. It was learned this stranger was an acquaintance of the Fraziers, who had trouble with Ullery a short time before the murder. The brothers' arrest followed. Witnesses yesterday chiefly discussed the altercation between Ullery and the Fraziers, telling how Ullery, though an old man, knocked both youths down in a fight.

ATTORNEY VISITS IOWA TO FIND HEIRS TO $40,000

Dubuque, Ia., Dec. 18.—From $30,000 to $10,000 awaits the legal heirs of Miss Margaret Thomas, a former Dubuque girl, who died suddenly in San Francisco almost a year ago and whose family connections are clothed in deep mystery. Lea Bleakmore, member of a San Francisco law firm, is in the city in an effort to locate relatives of the dead woman.

Since the death of Miss Thomas, who was about 53 years old, lawyers handling the estate have been working diligently to discover the heirs, without result.

In some mysterious manner all records of the life of the dead woman were either destroyed or lost, and shortly after her death when a search for information as to her relatives was made, the only clue obtained was an identification card deposited at a San Francisco bank, and a paper discovered among her personal effects, the latter containing the fact that her mother's maiden name was Armstrong.

CORPORATION HAS SOUL AND CAN ACT WITH MALICE

Des Moines, Ia., Dec 18.—The Iowa supreme court today officially held that a corporation has a soul, when it allowed Henry T. White $2,500 damages in his suit against the International Text Book company, which he charged with malicious prosecution. The company, as a defense, maintained there could have been no malicious prosecution, because a corporation has no personality or soul. The high court decreed this reasoning was faulty, saying, "The modern tendencies are more and more towards regarding corporations as possessing souls."

This was the fifth appearance in the case before the supreme court, each time the decision in the court being reversed on errors.

This time the decision of the Linn county court was affirmed

SIOUX COUNTY ORGANIZES TO EMPLOY COUNTY AGENT

Orange City, Ia., Dec. 18.—Sioux county has formed a county association to employ a county agricultural agent J W Coverdale, state organizer of county agent work, directed the work of organization. The funds needed to carry on the work have been raised among the farmers and banks in the county, and the state and federal government will give $1,200 annually towards the work. The board of supervisors will in all probability turn the county experimental work, which has been carried on at the county farm for many years, over to the county agent and will appropriate about $300 for the county agent work.

The following officers and directors were elected: B. T French, of Hawarden, president; George R. Moir, Sherman township, vice president, F E. Fuller, Orange City, secretary, C. Koole, Grant township, treasurer. Mr Fuller is county superintendent of schools.

MARSHALLTOWN—It was a peculiar cargo in charge of a Marshalltown boy, Ora Ball, who sailed a few days ago from New York city for Paris. Ball was entrusted with a shipment of $35,600 worth of artificial legs sold by a Chicago concern to the French government, for the use of crippled soldiers. Ball lost both legs in a railroad accident several years ago, and wears a set of artificial legs made by the Chicago concern He will demonstrate the use of the legs to those who are fitted to them.

FORT DODGE—Four Company G, I. N. G. men were fined by a court martial for absence from drill without excuse. They are Walter Blunt, W. S. Smith, Walter Olmstead and Ward Hastings. Two of them received fines of $14 and the other two were fined $36. The fines were ordered held in abeyance during regular attendance at drill in the future. The law can be invoked and the fine collected if the men fail to meet the requirements.

SHELDON—The Sheldon Commercial club and the Men's Bible class are in charge of a community Christmas tree and special program connected with it. It is the hope of the committee to make this a "giving Christmas" in Sheldon and that everyone shall be happy There will be a 25-foot tree at the principal corner and 40 smaller trees on the two principal streets.

SUTHERLAND—Sutherland is to have a municipal Christmas tree at the principal corner, and already funds have been raised to make everyone in the community happy

MEYERS HELD GUILTY OF MURDERING YOUNG WIFE IN FAMILY ROW

Made Defense That She Killed Herself, But Condition of Gun Belied Claim.

Winterset, Ia., Dec. 18.—Fred Meyers, a young farmer near Van Meter, was found guilty of murder in the second degree by a jury after an all night session at Winterset. The charge was that Meyers shot his bride of a few months. His mother is also under indictment for the same crime, and will be tried shortly.

Meyers' defense was that his wife conimitted suicide, but the state proved that the gun with which he claimed she shot herself was in such condition that it was impossible for a woman to pull the trigger.

The jury was composed principally of young married farmers.

ENGINEERS TO REPORT ON WHAT THEY DID WITH MONEY

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 18.—Ninety-nine county engineers of Iowa have been called on by the state highway commission for a report showing what was done with the road taxes received in 1915. About $11,000,000 was spent on roads and bridges during the year, according to the estimate of the state officials.

The commission says that the people of the state received more for their road taxes this year than they ever did before. Although the season had its disadvantages, a tremendous amount of road building was accomplished, the report says.

A wave of gravel road building enthusiasm is sweeping Iowa, the commission says. Nearly every county in the state has some project for placing gravel on main traveled roads leading to and from towns and market places, the board asserts. Polk county is given credit in the December bulletin for activity in road work.

Other projects given particular mention are at Rockwell City, Dubuque, Dyersville road, Muscatine to Burlington, Eagle Grove, Goldfield, Norwalk, Perry, Spencer, Yale, Vedette, Churdan, Adaza and other places.

ORGANIZED LABOR TO SUPPORT CUMMINS, STRIEF SAYS

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 18.—Organized labor will stand unitedly back of Senator Cummins in his race for the republican nomination for the presidency and for his election if he is nominated, according to J. H. Strief, of Sioux City, president of the Iowa State Federation of Labor, who was in Des Moines yesterday for a conference with the board of control on the question of a broom factory at Fort Madison.

Mr. Strief said yesterday that the labor vote no longer splits upon party lines. Factions have been practically eliminated, and he believes that the national vote will be as solidly for Cummins as will the Iowa vote. Senator Cummins' record of fairness to labor is as well known nationally as it is in Des Moines, where he is a member of a local carpenters' union. Mr Strief said. It is only when two candidates of equally good record are entered in the race that party politics sways the vote.

JURY FAILS TO AGREE IN LONG-DALTON CASE

Rockwell City, Ia., Dec 18 —In the libel suit of T. D. Long, former editor of the Manson Journal, vs. John F Dalton, editor of the Manson Democrat, which was begun Tuesday of last week and was submitted to the jury at 6 o'clock Tuesday evening, the jury failed to agree on a verdict, and was dismissed. The jury was out 17 hours It is reported that eight were for the defendant and four for the plaintiff

MERGER EFFECTED OF TWO BAPTIST COLLEGES IN IOWA

Des Moines, Ia., Dec 18.—A merger of Central college at Pella with Des Moines college was effected officially yesterday at the meeting of the board of education of the Baptist convention of North America. Under the terms of the merger the two colleges consolidate and the newly created college is to take on a new name. The home of the institution probably will be in Des Moines. The new college is to be made one of the greatest educational institutions of the denomination in the middle west.

INDICATIONS OF MURDER IN DEATH OF WATCHMAN

Davenport, Ia., Dec. 16.—June D. Sales, watchman on the pleasure boat Dalles, was found dead on the boat, yesterday. His skull was fractured and the body was frozen stiff. Death probably occurred a week ago.

The boat is owned by E. B. Stiles, of Des Moines, who has telegraphed that he will come here at once and assist in the investigation of the murder.

Sales was last seen a week ago. He is known to have been entertaining two men on the boat about that time. Both these men have disappeared.

CONTRIBUTION OF $40 FOR CONSCIENCE FUND

Unknown Person In Black Hawk County Sends Money to County Treasurer.

Waterloo, Ia., Dec. 17.—Somebody's conscience pricked and the county is $40 to the good. W. J. Burbank, county treasurer, while opening his mail, was curious to learn the contents of a large enveloped, addressed, apparently, in a disguised hand, as follows: "Mr. Burbank, county treasurer, Waterloo, Ia." Inside there were three $10 bills and two $5 bills, wrapped in common wrapping paper. On the paper was the direction, "Please put this in the county treasury." There was no other mark about the "conscience contribution." The letter was not registered and nothing was written in the corner for return address.

In times past "conscience contributions" have been received occasionally, but this is the largest sum that has been sent in many years by one whose full amount of taxes did not get on the assessor's books.

There are two separate and distinct taxing districts in Waterloo, and the treasurer will be at sea to know to which this $40 should be credited, unless he divides the amount equally between each.

MRS. HERRICK DIVORCED; PLANS TO GO ON STAGE

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 17.—Mrs. Mona Herrick, wife of Glenn Herrick, was granted a decree of divorce yesterday afternoon by default. Her husband did not show up at the trial. It is understood that by agreement Mrs. Herrick received $1,000 along with the decree.

She and Herrick eloped and were married in Blair, Neb., in January of this year, she said. The marriage was not announced until September.

Cruelty and nonsupport were the principal allegations in her petition for divorce.

It is supposed Mrs. Herrick will leave the city now. She asked to have the hearing of her divorce advanced so she could go to St. Paul to study for the stage.

HERBOLD PROTESTS ABOUT BEING CLASSED AS DEAD

Marshalltown, Ia., Dec 17.—With an action pending in court to declare him legally dead, together with an application to settle his estate, Julius H. Herbold, a former resident of Eden township, this county, has written Clerk S. N. Reilly, of the district court, that he is far from dead, and will resist any action of the court to so declare him.

Herbold is living in Ardmore, S. D., having left this county seven years ago. Within that time no word has ever been heard from him, and his mother, Mrs. Christine Herbold, of Rhodes, mourned her son as dead. She made the application to have the court act and decree Herbold dead in order that his third interest in the estate of his father, Henry Herbold, might be administered. The estate is a valuable one and consists of a fine farm near Rhodes.

CURTISS LANDS GREAT ORDER FOR AEROPLANES

New York, Dec. 15.—It was said in the financial district today that the Curtis aeroplane companies had closed a contract with the British government for $15,000,000 worth of aeroplanes. In the fiscal year, ending October 31, the company produced more than $6,000,000 worth of aeroplanes and motors, most of which went to the British government.

NURSE KEPT IN JAIL THREE WEEKS MERELY ON OFFICER'S ORDER

Woman Went From Sioux City to Des Moines Recently—Came Here From Canada.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 16.—Three weeks ago last Sunday night F. P. Whitfield, immigration commissioner, and City Detectives Chamberlain and Blake, called at the home of Dr. Clarence V. Watts, 650 Eighteenth street.

They went to see a Mrs. White—no one appears to know her first name—a trained nurse then employed at Dr. Watts' home to care for the dentist's mother, Mrs. Sarah A. Watts.

"We want you to come down to the police station with us," they told Mrs. White.

Dr. Watts' mother cried bitterly as Mrs. White was preparing to go with the policemen.

"I never had a nurse who was so good to me," she lamented.

At the police station Mrs. White was put in the matron's ward, along with the drunken women, and her captors departed. She was surprised by her arrest, and she couldn't imagine what it was for.

Policewoman Fischer went in to see her the next morning. The immigration commissioner, for whom the arrest was made, and with whom the police department was only cooperating, told Miss Fischer that Mrs. White was held for deportation on the grounds of insanity.

"He also told me and the police matron that it would please him better if she was not allowed to telephone, or to get an attorney, or to send out any mail," said Miss Fischer yesterday.

Inspector Whitfield apparently has forgotten about the woman held at his request. At least no further instructions have been received from him, and no formal charge has been filed against Mrs. White.

Last evening Miss Fischer determined that Mrs. White should remain in jail no longer without something being filed against her. She violated the wish of the immigration commissioner, expressed three weeks ago, and telephoned an attorney, explaining the case to him.

"It's a shame to treat a woman that way; to keep her in jail all that time," said Miss Fischer.

"It would be different if she was charged with any sort of a crime; but she isn't. She is just held on suspicion that she is insane. So far as I can see she isn't insane, either.

"Evidently she has had a great deal of trouble, due to liquor, in her life, and her mind appears to be a little overbalanced in favor of temperance. But she is in no way violent, and she should not be forced to consort, week after week, with the dregs of womanhood who find their way to jail.

"She has been a blessing to the girls that have been arrested while she has been there. During the three weeks a girl never has been brought in drunk too late for Mrs. White to get up, go back into the cell room with her, help her to undress, and talk to her in a motherly way She has been a mother to the girls."

Mrs. White came to Des Moines from Sioux City, where her brother, a minister, field agent for the Iowa Children's home, lives. She went to Sioux City from her home in Canada only a short time ago.

LOSES CORN CROP IN NEW PLAN OF DRYING

Mason City, Ia., Dec. 16.—Here is one method of taking care of the wet Iowa corn which will not work satisfactorily. J. S. Smith, of Hamilton county, picked about 800 bushels. Fearing that it would spoil if he cribbed it, he decided upon a drying plan. He erected a large furnace and piled the corn around this. He commenced with a light fire and gradually increased the heat, but the corn kept on heating and finally caught fire. All the corn used in the experiment was destroyed in spite of heroic efforts to save it.

HENRY MILLER, IDA COUNTY, IS STRICKEN SUDDENLY

Ida Grove, Ia., Dec. 16.—Henry Miller, a prominent farmer residing seven miles north of this place, dropped dead Sunday afternoon while playing with his children. He was about 45 years old and is survived by a widow and seven children. He was of a large and robust appearing nature and never had been troubled with any indications of heart trouble, which the physician called said was the cause of his sudden death.

PROFIT OF $59,000 FROM INCREASED PRICE FOR LAND

Mason City, Ia., Dec. 16.—Land doubling in price in eight years is making money pretty fast. That is the record of some Winnebago county land owned by B. A. Plummer. There are 800 acres in the tract and he bought it eight years ago for $41,000. He has just disposed of the entire tract; located four miles west of Forest City, for an even $100,000, Busch Bros., of Clinton, being the purchasers. It is the largest land sale made here in years.

DEFENSE MAKES SHOWING IN MEYER MURDER CASE

Winterset, Ia., Dec. 16.—Five cousins, a brother and a sister of Fred Meyer, young farmer charged with wife murder, took the stand in his behalf today. All testified that Meyer was a good husband and that he and his wife appeared happy. Meyer's sister, Wilma, testified that Mrs. Meyer suffered great pain from an affection of one arm and had threatened something desperate unless the arm healed.

The defense introduced two experts on bullets, who testified that it was possible for the bullet found in the wife's brain to have come from the revolver found by her side. Four physicians also said that it was possible for her to have made the statement that she was "tired of life," which Meyer and his mother claims she made when they found her dying. Meyer will take the stand today.

C. A. CALDWELL NAMED AS MASON CITY ALDERMAN

Mason City, Ia., Dec. 14.—The council today appointed C. A. Caldwell, proprietor of a local transfer company, as superintendent of public safety and finances, to succeed the late L. F. Kirk. Caldwell has sold his business to F. C. Eslick, general agent of the Chicago Great Western railroad, and after January 1 will devote his entire time to city business.

A great number of short railways are in the course of construction in Spain. These will act as feeders to the main li

Those under arrest are:

Paul Koenig, formerly head of bureau of investigation of Hamburg American line, who it is charged been the head of the German secret service in the United States since beginning of the war

Richard F. Lyendecker, a retail art goods in this city, a naturalized American alleged to have been employed by Koenig

Frederick Mayer of Jersey City, ported to have been a clerk in the fices of the Hamburg-American line and secretary to Koenig.

The fourth man held in custody George Fuchs, who was formerly Koenig's employe and who has given the authorities valuable information. So far as is known he is not alleged to be a party to any conspiracy

The arrests were made last night der the direction of agents of the partment of justice

Quarrel Leads to Arrest.

The evidence which led to the arrest of the three defendants was given by George Fuchs, who, it is charged, quarreled with Koenig over the payment of $15 which he claims Koenig owed him

The purpose of the alleged attempt to block the Welland canal was it is charged, to prevent the movement of supplies down the great lakes and through the Welland canal and St Lawrence river to the entente allies

The names of the conspirators in San Francisco, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Boston and other cities are said to have been discovered among the documents seized by the authorities in the raid upon the offices of Koenig, Lyendecker

The penalty for the crime charged in this case is three years in prison and $3,000 fine or both

The specific charge preferred against Koenig and Lydendecker is violation of section 13 of the United States penal code, which prohibits the planning within the boundaries of the United States of a military expedition against a foreign power

The arrests were made by W. M. Offley, in charge of the government's neurrality investigation; John H. Baker, his assistant, and Special Agent Thomas Tunney of the New York bureau of explosives and combustibles.

Bank Clerk Held.

Detectives, following the trail of plotters seeking to destroy shipments of ing ammunition to the allies, today arrested Frederick Schleindl, a clerk in the National City bank, whom they charge with larceny of documents, telegrams, and messages, which, it is alleged, he turned over to representatives of the German government.

These documents, the detectives say, gave information as to which vessels bore ammunition across the ocean. Schleindl is also charged with having given information to the German representatives as to what firms were manufacturing war supplies in this country and also the amounts of money placed in certain banks to the credit of the allies. Schleindl was taken to police headquarters for further examination.

Worked For Koenig.

Schleindl, detectives said, confessed to having obtained information regarding shipments of munitions and other matters, saying that he did this at the direction of Paul Koenig, head of the bureau of investigation of the Hamburg-American line, who was arrested yesterday on the charge of plotting the destruction of the Welland canal. Detectives said they found in Schleindl's pocket a telegram referring to a shipment of 2,000,000 rifles to the allies. The message was from the Banque Belge Pour L'Entranger in New York bank Schleindl had a meeting Koenig who, he said, was known alias, last May according to detectives, and of having kept in touch with the German consul here since the beginning of the war The prisoner, who is said to was a German reservist, declared to detectives when he met Koenig at an uptown hotel, arrangements were made for him to obtain cablegrams and other documents at the National City bank. For this work, Schleindl told the police, he has been receiving about $25 a week.

Police claim today that they found among Koenig's effects papers indicating that he had had relations with Schleindl.

Stahl His Tool, Charge.

Koenig, under the name of Lyendecker, it was charged, was responsible for obtaining from Gustav Stahl the affidavit in which he declared he had placed guns on board the Lusitania just before she sailed on her last voyage. Stahl was convicted on a charge of perjury and sentenced to [illegible] in the federal prison at Atlanta.

The actual plan to blow up the canal was mapped out in Buffalo, according to the complaint which was sworn to by Captain Offley, in charge of the government investigation. The complaint alleges that Koenig and Lyendecker left New York on September [illegible] last for Buffalo over the Lehigh Valley railroad. Later they went to Niagara Falls. The complaint finally charges that it was "the unlawful and intention of said defendants to destroy, mutilate and damage the Welland canal by force of arms."

The precise details of the alleged plot were withheld by federal authorities, but it is understood that Koenig and Lyendecker had employed a man who went out from Buffalo to Niagara Falls to photograph the canal locks, plans and make arrangements for blowing up the waterway at the most important point, and that this picture was to be used as the explosive line was to be used as the explo[illegible]

Part One

American Embassy, Vienna, [illegible] 1915.—Secretary of State, Washington. Following note received today from the minister for foreign affairs [illegible]

In reply to the much esteemed note No 1467 which his excellency Mr. Frederic Courtland Penfield, ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the United States of America, did me the honor to hand me in the name of the American government under date of the 9th inst. in the matter of the sinking of the Italian steamer Ancona the undersigned, preliminary to a thorough meritorious treatment of the demand, has the honor to observe that the sharpness with which the government of the United States [illegible] considers it necessary to blame the commanding officer of the submarine concerned in the affair and the firmness in which the demands expressed to him in person and [illegible] government [illegible] be expressed might well have warranted the expectation that the [illegible] the United States would [illegible] by the actual circumstances of the affair upon which it bases its [illegible]

As is not only due to [illegible] the presentation of the facts in the case in the aforesaid note leaves room for many doubts and even if this presentation were correct in all points and the most rigorous legal conception were applied in the judgment of the case it does not in any way sufficiently warrant attaching blame to the commanding officer of the war vessel, or to the imperial and royal government.

The government of the United States has also failed to designate the persons upon whose testimony it relies and to whom it apparently believes it may attribute a higher degree of credibility than to the commander of the imperial and royal fleet. The note also fails to give any information whatsoever as to the number, names and more precise fate of the American citizens who were on board of the said steamer at the [illegible] moment.

However in view of the fact that the Washington cabinet has now made a positive statement to the effect that citizens of the United States of America came to grief in the incident in question, the imperial and royal government is in principle ready to enter into an exchange of views in the affair with the government of the United States.

It must however in the first place raise the question why that government failed to give judicial reasons for the demands set forth in its note with reference to the special circumstances of the incriminating events upon which itself lays stress and why in lieu thereof it refused an exchange of correspondence, which it has conducted with another government in other cases.

Part Two.

The imperial and royal government is the less able to follow the Washington cabinet on this unusual path since it by no means possesses authentic knowledge of all of the pertinent correspondence of the government of the United States, nor is it of the opinion that such knowledge might be sufficient for it in the present case, which, in so far as it is informed, is in essential points of another nature than the case or cases to which the government of the United States seems to allude. The imperial and royal government may therefore leave it to the Washington cabinet to formulate the particular points of law against which the commanding officer of the submarine is alleged to have offended on the occasion of the sinking of the Ancona.

The government of the United States has also seen fit to refer to the attitude which the Berlin cabinet assumed in the above mentioned correspondence. The imperial and royal government finds in the much esteemed note no indication whatever of the intent with which this reference was made. Should, however, the government of the United States thereby have intended to express an opinion to the effect that a prejudice, of whatever nature, existed for the imperial and royal government with respect to the juridical consideration of the affair in question, this government must, in order to preclude possible misunderstanding, declare that as a matter of course it reserves to itself full freedom of maintaining its own legal views in the discussion of the case of the Ancona.

In having the honor to have recourse to the kindness of his excellency, the ambassador of the United States of America, with the most respectful request to be good enough to communicate the foregoing to the American government, and on this occasion to state that the imperial and royal government, in no less decree than the American government and under all circumstances, most sincerely deplores the fate of the innocent victims of the incident in question, the undersigned at the same time avails himself of this opportunity to renew the expression of his most distinguished consideration to his excellency, the ambassador Burian.

BRIDE AND GROOM: MINISTER WHO PERFORMS CEREMONY

Mrs. Norman Galt, President Wilson and Rev. Herbert Scott Smith.

FRANCE TO CHECK UP WAR ACCOUNTS

Special Committee of Deputies Named to Go Over Books of That Department In Search of Graft.

Paris, Dec. 18 (delayed)—The creation of a special parliamentary commission of 44 members to which the lists and files of all government and army contracts, past, present and future with the amounts involved, must be submitted is provided for in a resolution adopted by the chamber of deputies today.

The name of Under Secretary Thierry was brought into the debate by Deputy Leon Perier, who discussed at length "La Morue Francaise" a large [illegible] company which was recently tried and acquitted on a charge of selling fish chemically treated.

Paul Siegfried secured the floor at this point amid tense feeling. He averred that M. Thierry was not attached to the government at the time of the process against the codfish company and he declared that the criticisms which had just been made contained much exaggeration. The socialists protested at M. Siegfried's remarks and President Deschanel reminded the deputies that M. Siegfried's words had great weight in the chamber.

Deputy L. Font also attacked the codfish company, M. Le Gasse, and particularly Commissary Julia and several others concerned in the signing of the contract.

General Gallieni then replied to those presenting the interpellation regarding the purchase of war supplies. The minister of war cited numerous cases in which a judicial inquiry was being made. He said that Commissary Julia was confined for 30 days as punishment for his action with La Morue Francaise and then was retired. The same thing happened to several others whose names were given. The minister said that of 71 cases in which proceedings had been brought there were 27 condemnations, 13 no bills, two acquittals and 29 were on hearing.

General Gallieni dramatically recalled the orders to defend Paris when the Germans in the early part of the war were not far from the capital.

"In the office of the minister of war at that time was General Duquain, who was a commissary," said General Gallieni, "and whom I did not spare from punishment for his actions in the affairs of the codfish company."

M. Thierry spoke next and with considerable emotion asserted that he had been unjustly and violently attacked. He stated that he had been connected with La Morue Francaise from January to August, 1914, and that when he was called into government service he resigned his connection with the company. He gave a brief defense of his career and received much applause as he concluded.

TERRIFIC BATTLE AT GORIZIA IS RENEWED

Most Violent Cannonading of Campaign Is Reported—Austrians Beaten at Plava.

Geneva, Dec. 20, (via Paris).—A dispatch from Liabiach, Austria, to the Tribune De Geneve says that an artillery duel, which began yesterday morning, is still continuing around Gorizia. This has been the most violent engagement for several months. The Austrian counter attack at Plava was repulsed with a heavy loss, according to the dispatch, the outer forts there and the inner works at Gorizia having been pulverized and affording no protection to infantry from artillery fire. It is stated that Grand Duke Eugene has taken command of the Austrian forces in that sector.

GENERAL IS KILLED.

London, Dec. 18.—Major General von Stockhausen, of the German army, has been killed in action, according to a dispatch from Amsterdam to the Central News agency.

ASKS SENATORS' AID IN BLOCKING KERBERG

Congressman Steele to Prefer Formal Charges and Fight Confirmation.

Washington, Dec. 20.—Congressman Tom Steele has been soliciting the support of Senate members to oppose the confirmation of J. F. Kerberg as postmaster at Sioux City. This seems to indicate that Congressman Steele has been unable to get the administration to back down on the Kerberg appointment, as made during the congressional vacation, and that Mr. Kerberg's name will be reported to the Senate at an early date.

Senator Cummins was one of those whose aid was solicited by Congressman Steele in the fight against Postmaster Kerberg. Senator Cummins stated that he would not be disposed to take up the case if it is based merely upon factional or partisan grounds, but that if any charges are made against Mr. Kerberg's fitness for the office he will consider it his duty to bring the charges to the attention of the postoffice committee, as in any other case.

Congressman Steel informed Senator Cummins that formal charges will be filed if Mr. Kerberg's nomination is reported. There is considerable speculation as to the character of the charges, but they probably will not be known until they are heard in the postoffice committee or on the floor of the Senate in executive session.

Some of the democratic senators are understood to have indicated their belief that a serious political mistake was made in ignoring Congressman Steele's desires as to the postmaster in his home town, according to Washington reports, and the possibility is presented of a very lively session when the Kerberg appointment comes before the Senate. The question of supporting the "organization" or submitting to secret, private influences in the selection of public officials is involved. This is always a tender point with congressmen and one in which they are always threatened.

FIVE KILLED AND 11 ARE HURT IN WRECK

Chester, Pa., Dec. 18.—Five persons were killed and 11 injured, one probably fatally, in a rear end collision between an accommodation train, bound from Wilmington to Chester, and a train of empty express cars on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad last night at Felton, two miles south of this city.

Two of the dead were employes of the railroad and two were negro passengers, whose bodies have not been identified. Daniel Callenger, a passenger, of Philadelphia, was the fifth victime.

WHITE STAR LINE TO SETTLE FOR TITANIC

New York, Dec. 18.—The White Star line has agreed to pay $644,000 in settlement of all claims arising from the sinking of the Titanic on April 15, 1912, when more than 1,500 persons were drowned, attorneys for the line announced here today.

Of this amount approximately $500,000 would be distributed among American claimants; $50,000 to British claimants, and $114,000 would be required for interest and expenses in connection with the numerous suits.

Forty-four attorneys representing that number of persons out of more than 60 who have filed claims against the line, have signified their willingness to accept the settlement terms, according to George W. Betts, jr., one of the line's attorneys.

GERMANS PREPARE BLOW AT SALONIKI

London Convinced Teutonic Powers Are Determined to Strike Before the Allies Are Fortified.

London, Dec. 18.—The unprecedented military situation in Greece has developed a new crisis.

The allied troops, which, according to the estimates of British newspapers number 200,000, are fortifying themselves about Saloniki, digging trenches and placing guns. It is reported that the Germans are preparing to advance into Greek territory to attack them.

Whether the Bulgarians also will cross the border is a vital question to the Greeks. It is believed a Bulgarian advance would rekindle old enmities and might draw the Greek people into the conflict.

The Bulgarian army on the Serbo-Greek frontier is estimated to number 100,000, a Saloniki dispatch states. Some correspondents there believe the Bulgarians' halt is only temporary and that they will cooperate with Austro-German forces in a movement on Saloniki.

The Greek general election will be held tomorrow, but it is not expected the result will have any controlling influence on the policy of the government. The party of former Premier Venizelos has refrained from putting candidates into the field and the soldiers under arms, constituting a large proportion of the electorate, will not vote. King Constantine remains indisposed.

According to the Athens correspondent of the Times, the German minister at Athens told Premier Skouloudis that the Germans would be compelled to attack the British and French forces.

The landing of Italian forces in Albania is likely to prove an important factor, as the Italians may be able to attack themselves to the remainder of the Serbian army for concerted action.

London, Dec. 18.—The threat that the German minister at Athens is said to have made to the effect that Germany would be compelled to take action to drive out the allies at Saloniki if the fortification of that base continued, brings the Balkan development a step nearer a crisis. How soon the Austro-Germans cross the Greek frontier will apparently depend upon how soon they may be able to collect sufficient troops.

The Post's Athens correspondent says that the fact that an attack upon Saloniki has not yet begun, is attributed in diplomatic circles to the necessity in which the Germans find themselves of concentrating sufficient forces, repairing communications destroyed by the Anglo-French and Serbians and the bringing up of sufficient supplies of munitions, but that the moment they have made these preparations the attack will be begun and pushed home.

Dispatches to the Daily Mail from Athens estimate the total available German forces at 200,000 men who, however, are fatigued by continuous mountain marching and state that it is reported the intended German reinforcements have been diverted to Rustchuk to meet an expected Russian menace.

According to the Athens Embror, the ministerial organ, the government will address a fresh protest to the entente powers against fortifying Saloniki.

KICKLAND DEFEATS EGAN IN SUPREME COURT DECREE

Pierre, S. D., Dec. 18.—The supreme court decision in the Egan-Kickland case this morning is against Egan. The trial court had entered judgment in favor of Egan, but the supreme court reverses that order.

The case was brought in Minnehaha county by Kickland, who contended Egan had taken advantage of his client in charging exorbitant attorney fees for settling an estate. This case is one of the points upon which the present disbarment proceedings are pending against Egan.

A deficit in Italy's trade balance is accounted for in part by the loss of $150,000,000 a year formerly spent by travelers in that country and $20,000,000 usually sent home from the United States by laborers.

INCREASED GUARD IS THROWN ABOUT MRS. GALT'S HOME

Extra Precautions Are Taken to Safeguard President and His Bride During Wedding Tonight.

COMPLETE ARRANGEMENTS

Route to Be Taken on Honeymoon Not Made Public—Third American President to Wed In Office.

Washington, Dec. 18.—The wedding of President Wilson and Mrs. Edith Bolling Galt overshadowed in interest today affairs of state.

All arrangements are complete for the ceremony, which is to be solemnized at Mrs. Galt's home tonight. The members of the two families, who are to be the wedding guests, are here, and decorators and florists have put the finishing touches on the rooms to be used for the wedding. Arrangements for guarding the house during the ceremony included a diversion of all traffic from the street and a heavy guard of policemen and secret service agents about the premises.

Trip Plans Unknown.

Although details of the wedding trip have not been disclosed, it is known that the couple will leave for the south shortly after the ceremony. The Rev. Herbert Scott Smith, rector of St. Margaret's Protestant Episcopal church here, is to perform the ceremony.

Members of the President's family attended at noon the christening of Ellen Wilson McAdoo, daughter of Secretary and Mrs. McAdoo, the president's only granddaughter. The christening was in the Blue room of the White House.

The president was godfather and Mrs. Francis B. Sayre, the baby's aunt, and Miss Helen Woodrow Bones, cousin of the president, were godmothers. The Rev. Roland Scott Smith, rector of St. John's Protestant Episcopal church here christened the baby who was born last May.

The president's other grandchild, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Sayre, was christened at Williamstown, Mass. The president acted as his godfather, too.

The president paid an early morning call today on Mrs. Galt. After a brief visit the president went to his bank where he spent half an hour looking through his safe deposit box and going over some accounts.

Scores of Presents.

One room at Mrs. Galt's home has been reserved for wedding presents. Many gifts have been received from strangers in spite of the efforts of the president and Mrs. Galt to discourage giving of presents from those outside the circle of friends and relatives. Gifts continued to arrive at the White House today. One was a small bale of cotton sent by a Texas admirer of the president.

The president planned to devote the afternoon today to work and clearing up much official business before departing on his honeymoon trip. He will dine with members of his family at the White House at 7 p. m., and leave soon afterward for Mrs. Galt's home for the wedding ceremony.

Woodrow Wilson is the third president to be married during his term of office. President Tyler was the first, and President Cleveland was the other. Mr. Tyler, like Mr. Wilson, was left a widower during his term. Two years later, in 1844, in New York city, he was married to Miss Julia Gardiner, who then presided at the White House functions during the last year of her husband's term of office.

Grover Cleveland's marriage to Miss Frances Folsom took place in the Blue room of the executive mansion. It was comparatively a private affair, for the invited guests included only the cabinet members, their wives and a few friends and relatives of the couple.

Third Wedding In Family.

President Wilson's wedding is the third in his family since he took office. The first White House wedding of his term was that of his second daughter, Jessie Woodrow Wilson, to Francis Bowes Sayres, and the other was that of his youngest daughter, Eleanor, to Secretary McAdoo. The president now has two grandchildren, the little son of the Sayres and the baby daughter of the McAdoo's.

The president and his bride both are Virginians by birth. He was born at Staunton 59 years ago this month and she was born at Wytheville, the daughter of Judge and Mrs. William H. Bolling and was one child in a large family. Two sisters, Mrs. Alexander H. Galt and Miss Bertha Bolling, and three brothers, John Randolph, Richard Wilmer and Julian B. Bolling live in Washington. Rolfe E. Bolling, another brother, is manager of the commercial bank at Panama, and another, Dr. William E. Bolling, lives in Louisville, Ky. A third sister, Mrs. M. H. Maury, lives in Anniston, Ala. The bride's family has been prominent in the history of Virginia and she herself is a descendant of Pocahontas, the Indian chief's daughter, who married John Rolfe.

Since 1896 Mrs. Galt has lived in Washington, belonging to none of the distinct social sets, but active in charity and philanthropy in her own way.

From her first husband she inherited control of a prosperous mercantile business, of which she has been accredited with now being the active head, and many tributes are paid to her ability. But activity in business, her friends say, never has diminished her interest in a woman's world. She loves flowers, books and outdoor recreations. After the president's courtship began she took up golf and on many Saturday afternoons they were seen together on the links at some one of the country clubs about the capital, or at other times taking long motor drives over the Virginia hills or along the shore roads in lower Maryland. Often they took picnic luncheon from the White House on their journeys and ate it by the roadside.

A Congenial Couple.

In the White House circle the bride quickly found her place. She plays the piano, sings and loves poetry and when in the intimacy of the family the president often has read aloud his favorite poems, as is his custom, she is said to have been one of his most interested hearers.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. IF BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if Kidneys feel like lead or Bladder bothers you—Meat forms uric acid.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatism, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you have backache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in urine so it no longer irritates, causing bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thereby avoiding serious complications.

A well known local druggist says he has sold lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is in its infancy.

A SECRET OF SAVING

Two business girls who couldn't stand boarding, moved into a little flat They found the rent was no more than for their two separate rooms in the boarding house but they had to do the housework themselves.

Next these girls dreamed of little house with a garden. And now they own a place of seven acres just outside a large city

Work of the kind which many women call drudgery made their dream come true, they say.

"We found that human labor is the highest paid element in the cost of living," says one of them.

"We discovered that it doubles the price of a loaf of bread—so we baked our own bread. It makes a $3 hat cost $10—so we trimmed our own hats.

"We never paid anyone for doing what we could do just as well ourselves.

This is one secret of thrift. It is the only secret back of many a substantial savings account.

ON CHRISTMAS DAY IN THE MORNING

BY GRACE S. RICHMOND.

(Copyright, 1905, by the Ridgway-Thayer Company.) (Copyright, 1908, by Doubleday, Page & Company.)

And all the angels in heaven do sing,
On Christmas day, on Christmas day;
And all the bells on earth do ring,
On Christmas day in the morning.
—Old Song.

That Christmas day virtually began a whole year beforehand, with a red hot letter written by Guy Fernald to his younger sister, Nan, who had been married to Samuel Burnett just two and one-half years. The letter was read aloud by Mrs. Burnett to her husband at the breakfast table, the second day after Christmas. From start to finish it was upon one subject, and it read as follows:

"Dear Nan—It's a confounded, full grown shame that not a soul of us all got home for Christmas—except yours truly, and he only for a couple of hours. What have the blessed old folks done to us that we treat them like this? I was invited to the Sewalls' for the day, and went, of course—you know why. We had a ripping time, but along toward evening I began to feel worried. I really thought Ralph was home—he wrote me that he might swing round that way by the holidays—but I knew the rest of you were all wrapped up in your own Christmas trees and weren't going to get there.

"Well, I took the 7.30 down and walked in on them. Sitting all alone by the fire, by George, just like the pictures you see of 'The Birds All Flown,' and that sort of thing. I felt gulpish in my throat, on my honor I did, when I looked at them. Mother just gave one gasp and flew into my arms, and Dad got up more slowly—he has that darned rheumatism worse than ever this winter—and came over and I thought he'd shake my hand off. Well, I sat down between them by the fire, and pretty soon I got down in the old way on a cushion by mother, and let her run her fingers through my hair, the way she used to—and Nan, I'll be indicted for perjury if her hand wasn't trembly. They were so glad to see me it made my throat ache.

"Ralph had written he couldn't get round, and of course you'd all written and sent them things—jolly things, and they appreciated them. But—blame it all—they were just dead lonesome—and the whole outfit of us within 300 miles, most within 30.

"Nan, next Christmas it's going to be different. That's all I say. I've got it all planned out. The idea popped into my head when I came away last night. Not that they had a word of blame—not they. They understood all about the children, and the cold snap, and Ed's being under the weather, and Oliver's wife's neuralgia, and Ralph's girl in the west, and all that. But that didn't make the thing any easier for them. As I say, next year—but you'll all hear from me then. Meanwhile, run down and see them once or twice this winter, will you, Nan? Somehow, it struck me they aren't so young as they used to be.

"Splendid winter weather Margaret Sewall's a peach, but I don't seem to make much headway. My best to Sam.

"Your affectionate brother,
"Guy."

Gay Nan had felt a slight choking in her own throat as she read this letter "We really must make an effort to be there Christmas next year, Sam," she said to her husband, and Sam assented cheerfully. He only wished there were a father and mother somewhere in the world for him to go home to.

Guy wrote the same sort of thing, with more or less detail, to Edson and Oliver, his married elder brothers, to Ralph, his unmarried brother, and to Carolyn—Mrs. Charles Wetmore, his other—and elder—married sister. He received varied and more or less sympathetic responses, to the effect that with so many little children, and such snowdrifts as always blocked the roads leading toward North Estabrook, it really was not strange—and of course somebody would go next year. But they had all sent the nicest gifts th could find. Didn't Guy think mother liked those beautiful Russian sab's Ralph sent her? And was father pleased with his gold eaded cane from Oliver? Surely with such presents pouring in from all the children, Father and Mother Fernald couldn't feel so awfully neglected.

"Gold headed cane be hanged!" Guy exploded when he read this last sentence from the letter of Marian, Oliver's wife. "I'll bet she put him up to it. If anybody dares give me a gold headed cane before I'm 95, I'll thrash him with it on the spot. He wasn't using it either—bless him He had his old hickory stick, and he wouldn't have that if t t abominable rheumatism hadn't lipped him so hard. He isn't old nough to use a cane, by jolly, and Ol ought to know it, if Marian doesn't. I m glad I sent him that typewriter. He liked that, I know he did, and it'll amuse him, too—not make him think he's ready to die!"

Guy was not the fellow to forget anything that had taken hold of him as that pathetic Christmas homecoming had done When the year had nearly rolled around, the 1st of December saw him at work getting his plans in trim. He began with his eldest brother, Oliver because he considered Mrs. Oliver the hardest proposition he had to tackle in the carrying out of his idea

"You see," he expounded patiently as they sat and stared at him, "it isn't that they aren't always awfully glad to see the whole outfit, children and all, but it just struck me it would do 'em a lot of good to revive old times I thought if we could make it just as much as possible like one of the old Christmases before anybody got married—hang up the stockings and all, you know—it would give them a mighty jolly surprise. I plan to have us all creep in in the night and go to bed in our old rooms. And then in the morning—See?"

Mrs. Oliver looked at him. An eager flush lit his still boyish face. Guy was 28—and his blue eyes were very bright. His lithe, muscular figure bent toward her pleadingly; all his arguments were aimed at her. Oliver sat back in his impassive way and watched them both. It could not be denied that it was Marian's decisions which usually ruled in matters of this sort.

"It seems to me a very strange plan," was Mrs. Oliver's comment, when Guy had laid the whole thing before her in the most tactful manner he could command. She spoke rather coldly. "It is not usual to think that families should be broken up like this on Christmas day, of all days in the year. Four families, with somebody gone—a mother or a father—just to please two elderly people who expect nothing of the sort, and who understand just why we can't all get home at once. Don't you think you are really asking a good deal?"

Guy kept his temper, though it was hard work. "It doesn't seem to me I am," he answered quite gently. "It's only for once. I really don't think father and mother would care much what sort of presents we brought them, if we only came ourselves. Of course, I know I'm asking a sacrifice of each family, and it may seem almost an insult to invite the children and all, yet—perhaps next year we'll try a gathering of all the clans. But just for this year—honestly—I do awfully wish you'd give me my way. If you'd seen those two last Christmas ——"

He broke off, glancing appealingly at Oliver himself. To his surprise that gentleman shifted his pipe to the corner of his mouth and put a few pertinent questions to his younger brother.

Had he thought it all out? What time should they arrive there? How early on the day after Christmas could they get away? Was he positive they could all crowd into the house without rousing and alarming the pair?

"Sure thing," Guy declared quickly. "Marietta—well, you know I've had the soft side of her old heart ever since I was born, somehow. I talked it all over with her last year, and I'm solid with her, all right. She'll work the game. You see, father's quite a bit deaf now—"

"Father deaf?"

"Sure. Didn't you know it?"

"Forgotten. But mother'd hear us."

"No, she wouldn't. Don't you know how she trusts everything about the house to Marietta since she got that fall—"

"Mother get a fall?"

"Why, yes!" Guy stared at his brother with some impatience. "Don't you remember she fell down the back stairs a year ago last October, and hurt her knee?"

"Certainly, Oliver," his wife interposed. "I wrote for you to tell her how sorry we were. But I supposed she had entirely recovered."

"She's a little bit lame, and always will be," said Guy, a touch of reproach in his tone. "Her knee stiffens up in the night, and she doesn't get up and go prowling about at the least noise, the way she used to. Marietta won't let her. So if we make a whisper of noise Marietta'll tell her it's the cat or something. Good Lord! yes—it can be worked all right. The only thing that worries me is the fear that I can't get you all to take hold of the scheme. On my word, Ol,"—he turned quite away from his sisterin-law's critical gaze and faced his brother with something like indignation in his frank young eyes—"don't we owe the old home anything but a present tied up in tissue paper once a year?"

Marian began to speak. She thought Guy was exceeding his rights in talking as if they had been at fault. It was not often that elderly people had so many children within call—loyal children who would do anything within reason But certainly a man owed something to his own family. And at Christmas' Why not carry out this plan at some other—

Her husband abruptly interrupted her He took his pipe quite out of his mouth and spoke decidedly.

"Guy, I believe you're right. I'll be sorry to desert my own kids, of course, but I rather think they can stand it for once. If the others fall into line, you may count on me."

Guy got away, feeling that the worst of his troubles was over. In his younger sister, Nan, he hoped to find an ardent ally and he was not disappointed. Carolyn—Mrs. Charles Wetmore -also fell in heartily with the plan. Ralph, from somewhere in the far west, wrote that he would get home or break a leg. Edson thought the idea rather a foolish one, but was persuaded by Jessica, his wife—whom Guy privately declared a trump—that he must go by all means. And so they all fell into line, and there remained for Guy only the working out of the details.

"Mis' Fernald"—Marietta Cooley strove with all the decision of which she was capable to keep her high-pitched, middle-aged voice in order—"'fore you get to bed I'm most forgetting' what I was to ask you. I s'pose you'll laugh, but Guy—he wrote me partic'lar he wanted you and his father to"—Marietta's rather stern, thin face took on a curious expression—"to hang up your stockin's."

Mrs. Fernald paused in the doorway of the bed room opening from the sitting room downstairs. She looked back at Marietta with her gentle smile.

"Guy wrote that?" she asked. "Then—it almost looks as if he might be coming himself, doesn't it, Marietta?"

"Well, I don't know's I'd really expect him," Marietta replied, turning her face away and busying herself about the hearth. "I guess what he meant was more in the way of a surprise for a Christmas present—something that'll go into a stockin', maybe."

"It's rather odd he should have written you to ask me," mused Mrs. Fernald, as she looked at the stockings.

Marietta considered rapidly. "Well, I s'pose he intended for me to get 'em on the sly without mentionin' it to you, an'put in what he sent, but I sort of guessed you might like to fall in with his idee by hangin' 'em up yourself, here by the chimbley, where the children all used to do it. Here's the nails, same as they always was."

Mrs. Fernald found the stockings, and touched her husband on the shoulder, as he sat unlacing his shoes. "Father, Guy wrote he wanted us to hang up our stockings," she said, raising her voice a little and speaking very distinctly. The elderly man beside her looked up, smiling.

"Well, well," he said, "anything to please the boy. It doesn't seem more than a year since he was a little fellow hanging up his own stocking, does it, mother?"

The stockings were hung in silence. They looked thin and lonely as they dangled beside the dying fire. Marietta hastened to make them less lonely. "Well," she said, in a shamefaced way, "the silly boy said I was to hang mine, too Goodness knows what he'll find to put into it that'll fit, 'less it's a poker."

They smiled kindly at her, wished her good night, and went back into their own room. The little episode had aroused no suspicion. It was very like Guy's affectionate boyishness.

"I presume he'll be down," said Mrs. Fernald, as she limped quitely about the room, making ready for bed. "Don't you remember how he surprised us last year? I'm sorry the others can't come. Of course, I sent them all the invitation, just as usual—I shall always do that—but it is pretty snowy weather, and I suppose they don't quite like to risk it."

Presently, as she was putting out the light, she heard Marietta at the door.

"Mis' Fernald, Peter Piper's got back in this part o' the house, somehow, and I can't lay hands on him. Beats all how cute that cat is. Seem 's if he knows when I'm goin' to put him out in the woodshed. I don't think likely he'll do no harm, but I thought I'd tell you, so'f you heard any queer noises in the night you'd know it was Peter."

"Very well, Marietta"—the soft voice came back to the schemer on the other side of the door. "Peter will be all right, wherever he is, I shan't be alarmed if I hear him."

"All right, Mis' Fernald; I just though I'd let you know," and the guileful one went grinning away.

There was a long silence in the sleeping room. Then, out of the darkness came this little colloquy:

"Emeline, you aren't getting to sleep."

"I—know I'm not, John. I—Christmas eve keeps one awake, somehow. It always did."

"Yes . . . I don't suppose the children realize at all, do they?"

"Oh, no — oh, no! They don't realize—they never will, till——they're here themselves. It's all right. I think—I think at least Guy will be down tomorrow, don't you?"

"I guess maybe he will." Then, after a short silence. "Mother—you've got me, you know. You know—you've always got me, dear."

"Yes." She would not let him hear the sob in her voice She crept close, and spoke cheerfully in his best ear "And you've got me, Johnny Boy'"

"Thank the Lord, I have!"

So, counting their blessings, they fell asleep at last. But, even in sleep, one set of lashes was strangely wet.

"Christopher Jinks, what a drift'"

"Lucky we weren't two hours later."

"Sh-h—they might hear us."

"Nan, stop laughing, or I'll drop a snowball down your neck!"

"Here, Carol, give me your hand. I'll plough you through. Large bodies move slowly, of course, but go elbows first and you'll get there."

"Gee whiz! Can't you get that door open? I'll bet it's frozen fast"

A light showed inside the kitchen The storm door swung open, propelled by force from inside A cautious voice said low "That the Fernald family"

A chorus of whispers came back at Miss Marietta Cooley

"Yes, yes—let us in, we're freezing

"You bet we're the Fernard family—every man-Jack of us—not one missing."

"Oh, Marietta—you dear old thing'"

"Hurry up—this is their side of the house."

"Sh-h-h—"

"Carol, your sh-h-ishes would wake the dead!"

Stumbling over their own feet and bundles in the endeavor to be preternaturally quiet, the crew poured into the warm kitchen. Bearded Oliver, oldest of the clan, stout Edson, big Ralph, tall and slender Guy—and the two daughters of the house, Carolyn, growing plump and rosy at 30, Nan, slim and girlish at 24—they were all there. Marietta heaved a sigh of content as she looked them over

"Well, I didn't really think you'd get here—all of you Thank the Lord, you have. I s'pose you're tearin' hungry, bein' past 'leven. If you think you can eat quiet as cats, I'll feed you up, but if you're goin' to make as much rumpus as you did comin' round the corner o' the woodshed I'll have to pack you straight off to bed up the back stairs."

They pleaded for mercy and hot food They got it—everything that could be had that would diffuse no odor of cookery through the house. Smoking clam broth, a great pot of baked beans, cold meats and jellies—they had no reason to complain of their reception. They ate hungrily with the appetites of winter travel.

"Say, but this is great," exulted Ralph, the stalwart, consuming a huge wedge of mince pie with a fine disregard for any consequences that might overtake him. "This alone is worth it. I haven't eaten such pie in a century. What a jolly place this old kitchen is! Let's have a candy pull tomorrow I haven't been home Christmas in—let me see—by Jove, I believe it's six—seven—yes, seven years. Look here, there's been so excuse for me, but what about you people that live near'"

He looked accusingly about. Carolyn got up and came around to him "Don't talk about it tonight, she whispered. "We haven't any of us realized how long it's been."

"We'll get off to bed now," Guy declared, rising "I can't get over the feeling that they may catch us down here. If either of them should want some hot water or anything——"

"The dining room door's bolted, Marietta assured him, "but it might need explainin' if I had to bring em hot water by way of the parlor. Now, go awful careful up them stairs. They are pretty near over your ma's head, but I don't dare have you tramp through the settin' room to the front ones. Now, remember that seventh stair creaks like Ned—you've got to step right on the outside edge of it to keep it quiet I don't know but what you boys better step right up over that seventh stair without touchin' foot to it."

"All right—we'll step!"

"Who's going to fix the bundles'" Carolyn paused to asked as she started up the stairs.

"Marietta," Guy answered. "I've labeled every one, so it'll be easy. If they hear paper rattle, they'll think it's the usual presents we've sent on, and if they come out they'll see Marietta, so it's all right. Quiet, now. Remember the seventh stair!"

They crept up, one by one, each to his or her old room. There needed to be no "doubling up," for the house was large, and each room had been left precisely as its owner had left it. It was rather ghostly, this stealing silently about with candles, and, in the necessity for the suppression of speech, the animation of the party rather suffered eclipse. It was late, and they were beginning to be sleepy, so they were soon in bed. But, somehow, once composed for slumber, more than one grew wakeful again.

Guy, lying staring at a patch of wintry moonlight on the odd striped paper of his wall—it had stoppd snowing since they had come into the house, and the clouds had broken away, leaving a brilliant sky—discovered his door to be softly opening. The glimmer of a candle filtered through the crack, voice whispered his name.

"Who is it?" he answered under his breath.

"It's Nan. May I come in?"

"Of course. What's up?"

"Nothing. I wanted to talk a minute." She came noiselessly in, wrapped in a woolly scarlet kimono, scarlet slippers on her feet, her brown braids hanging down her back. The frost bloom lately on her cheeks had melted into a ruddy glow, her eyes were stars. She set her candle on the little stand, and sat down on the edge of Guy's bed. He raised himself on his elbow and lay looking appreciatively at her.

"This is like old times," he said. "But won't you be cold?"

"Not a bit. I'm only going to stay a minute. Anyhow, this thing is warm as toast. . . . Yes, isn't it like old times?"

"Got your lessons for tomorrow?"

She laughed. "All but my Caesar. You'll help me with that, in the morning, won't you?"

"Sure—if you'll make some cushions for my bobs."

"I will. Guy—how's Lucy Harper?"

"She's all right. How's Bob Fields?"

"Oh, I don't care for him now!" She tossed her head.

He kept up the play. "Like Dave Strong better, huh? He's a softy."

"He isn't. Oh, Guy—I heard you had a new girl."

"New girl nothing. Don't care for girls."

"Yes, you do. At least I think you do. Her name is—Margaret."

The play ceased abruptly. Guy's face changed. "Perhaps I do," he murmured, while his sister watched him in the candle light.

"She won't answer yet?" she asked very gently.

"Not a word."

"You've cared a good while, haven't you, dear?"

"Seems like ages. Suppose it isn't"

"No—only two years, really caring hard. Plenty of time left."

He moved his head impatiently. "Yes, if I didn't mind seeing her smile on Tommy Grower—de-il take him—just as sweetly as she smiles on me. If she ever held out the tip of her finger to me, I'd seize it and hold on to it for fair. But she doesn't. She won't. And she's going south next week for the rest of the winter, and there's a fellow down there in South Carolina where she goes—oh, he—he's red headed after her, like the rest of us. And, well—I'm up against it good and hard, Nan, and that's the truth."

"Poor boy. And you gave up going to see her on Christmas day, and came down here into the country just to—"

"Just to get even with myself for the way I've neglected 'em these two years while my head's been so full of—her. It isn't fair After last year I'd have come home today if it had meant I had to lose—well—Margaret knows I'm here. I don't know what she thinks."

"I don't believe, Guy, boy, she thinks the less of you. Yes—I must go. It will all come right in the end, dear—I'm sure of it. No, I don't know how Margaret feels—Good night — good night'"

Christmas morning, breaking upon a wintry world—the star in the east long set Outside the house a great ance of drift wrapped hill and plain inside, a crackling fire upon a wide hearth, and a pair of elderly people waking a lonely holiday.

Mrs. Fernald crept to the door of her room the injured knee always made walking difficult after a night's quiet She meant to sit down by the fire which she had lately heard Marietta stirring and feeding into activity, and warm herself at its flame She remembered with a sad little smile that she and John had hung their stockings there, and looked to see what miracle had been wrought in the night.

'Father'— Her voice caught in her throat . What was all this?

By some mysterious influence her husband learned that she was calling him, though he had not really heard He came to the door and looked at her, then as the chimneypiece where the stockings hung—a long row of them, as they had not hung since the children grew up—stockings of quality: one of brown silk, Nan's, a fine gray sock with scarlet clocks, Ralph's—all stuffed to the top, with bundles overflowing upon the chimneypiece and even to the floor below

"What's this—what's this?" John Fernald's voice was puzzled. "Whose are these?" He limped closer He put on his spectacles and stared hard at a parcel protruding from the sock with the scarlet clocks.

"'Merry Christmas to Relph from Nan,'" he read. "'To Ralph from Nan,'" he repeated vaguely His gaze turned to his wife. His eyes were wide like a child's. But she was getting to her feet, from the chair into which she had dropped.

"The children'" she was saying. "They—they—John -- they must be here?"

He followed her through the chilly hall to the front staircase seldom used now, and up—as rapidly as those slow, stiff joints would allow.

Trembling, Mrs. Fernald pushed open the first door at the top.

A rumpled brown head raised itself from among the pillows, a pair of sleepy but affectionate brown eyes smiled back at the two faces peering in, and a voice brimful of mirth cried softly "Merry Christmas, mammy and daddy'" They stared at her, their eyes growing misty It was their little daughter Nan, not yet grown up'

They could not believe it Even when they had been to every room—had seen their big son Ralph, still sleeping, his yet youthful face, full of healthy color pillowed on his brawny arm, and his mother had gently kissed him awake to be half strangled in his hug—when they had met Edson's hearty laugh as he fired a pillow at them—carefully, so that his father could catch it—when they had seen plump pretty Carol pulling on her stockings as she sat on the floor smiling up at them—Oliver, advancing to meet them in his bathrobe and slippers—Guy, holding out both arms from above his blankets and shouting "Merry Christmas'—and how do you like your children?"—even then it was difficult to realize that not one was missing—and that no one else was there. Unconsciously Mrs. Fernard found herself looking about for the sons' wives and daughters' husbands and children. She loved them all—yet—to have her own, and no others, just for this one day—it was happiness indeed.

When they were all downstairs, about the fire, there was great rejoicing. They had Marietta in, indeed, she had been hovering continuously in the background, to the apparently frightful jeopardy of the breakfast in preparation, upon which, nevertheless, she had managed to keep a practised eye.

"And you were in it, Marietta?" Mr Fernald said to her in astonishment, when he first saw her. "How in the world did you get all these people into the house and to bed without waking us?"

"It was pretty consid'able of a resk," Marietta replied, with modest pride, "seein' as how they was inclined to be middlin' lively. But I kep' a-hushin' 'em up, and I filled 'em up so full of victuals they couldn't talk. I didn't know's there'd be any eatables left for today," she added—which last remark, since she had been slyly baking for a week, Guy thought might be considered pure bluff.

At the breakfast table, while the eight heads were bent, this thanksgiving arose, as the master of the house, in a voice not quite steady, offered it to one unseen·

Thou who camest to us on that first Christmas day, we bless Thee for this good and perfect gift Thou sendest us today, that Thou forgettest us not in these later years, but givest us the greatest joy of our lives in these our loyal children.

Nan's hand clutched Guy's under the table. "Doesn't that make it worth it?" his grasp said to her, and hers replied with a frantic pressure, "Indeed it does, but we don't deserve it."

. . . It was late in the afternoon, a tremendous Christmas dinner well over, and the group scattered, when Guy and his mother sat alone by the fire. The "boys" had gone out to the great stock barn with their father to talk over with him every detail of the prosperous business he, with the help of an invaluable assistant, was yet able to manage. Carolyn and Nan had ostensibly gone with them but in reality the former was calling upon an old friend of her childhood, and the latter had begged a horse and sleigh and driven merrily away alone upon an errand she would tell no one but her mother.

Mrs. Fernald sat in her low chair at the side of the hearth, her son upon a cushion at her feet, his head resting against her knee. Her slender fingers were gently threading the thick locks of his hair, as she listened while he talked to her of everything in his life, and, at last, of the one thing he cared most about.

"Sometimes I go desperate and think I may as well give her up for good and all, as he's saying. She's so—so—elusive—I don't know any other word for it. I never can tell how I stand with her. She's going south next week. I've asked her to answer me before she goes. Some how, I've clung to the hope that I'd get my answer today. You'll laugh; but I left word with my office boy to wire me if a note or anything from her came. It's 4 o'clock and I have't heard. She—you see, I can't help thinking it's because she's going to—turn me down—and—hates to do it—Christmas day."

He turned suddenly and buried his face in his mother's lap; his shoulders heaved a little in spite of himself. His mother's hand caressed his head more tenderly than ever. But, if he could have seen, her eyes were very bright.

They were silent for a long time. Then suddenly a jingle of sleigh bells approached through the falling winter twilight, drew near, and stopped at the door. Guy's mother laid her hands upon his shoulders. "Son," she said, "there's some one stopping now. Perhaps it's the boy with a message from the station."

He was on his feet in an instant. Her eyes followed him as he rushed away through the hall. Then she rose and quietly closed the sitting room door behind him.

As Guy flung open the front door, a tall and slender figure in gray furs and a wide gray hat was coming up the walk. Eyes whose glance had long been his dearest torture met Guy Fernald's and fell. Lips like which there were no others in the world, smiled tremulously in response to his eager exclamations. And over the piquant young face rose an exquisite color which was not altogether born of the wintry air. The girl who for two years had been only "elusive" had taken the significant step of coming to North Estabrook in response to an eloquent telephone message sent that morning by Nan.

Holding both her hands fast, Guy led her up into the house—and found himself alone with her in the shadowy hall. With one gay shout Nan had driven away toward the barn. The inner doors were all closed. Blessing the wonderful sagacity of his womankind, Guy took advantage of his moment.

"Nan brought you—I can see that. I know you're very fond of her, but—you didn't come wholly to please her did you—Margaret?"

"Not wholly."

"I've been looking all day for my answer. I—oh—I wonder if—" he was gathering courage from her aspect, which for the first time in his experience failed to keep him at a distance—"dare I think you—bring it?"

She slowly lifted her face. "I thought it was so—so dear of you," she muttered, "to come home to your people instead of—staying with me. I thought you deserved—what you say—you want—"

"Margaret—you—"

"I haven't given you any Christmas present. Will—I—do?"

"Will you do! . . . Oh!" It was a great explosive sigh of relief and joy, and as he gave vent to it he caught her close. "Will—you—do' . . . Good Lord! . . . I rather think you will!"

"Emeline—"

"Yes, John dear?"

"You're not—crying?"

"Oh, no—no, no, John!" What a blessing deafness is sometimes! The ear cannot detect the delicate tremolo which might tell the story too plainly. And in the darkness of night, the eye cannot see.

"It's been a pretty nice day, hasn't it?"

"A beautiful day!"

"I guess there's no doubt but the children care a good deal for the old folks yet."

"No doubt at all, dear."

"It's good to think they're all asleep under the roof once more, isn't it?—And one extra one. We like her, don't we?"

"Oh, very, very much!"

"Yes, Guy's done well. I always thought he'd get her, if he hung on. The Fernalds always hang on, but Guy's got a mite of a temper—I didn't know but he might let go a little too soon. Well—it's great to think they all plan to spend every Christmas day with us, isn't it, Emeline?"

"Yes, dear—it's—great."

"Well—I must let you go to sleep. It's been a big day, and I guess you're tired. Emeline, we've not only got each other—we've got the children, too. That's a pretty happy thing at our age, isn't it, now?"

"Yes—yes."

"Good night — Christmas night, Emeline"

"Good night, dear."

New Jersey Women Get Even.

From the Chicago Post.

Only a few weeks ago Newark, N. J., told woman, with emphatic majority, her place is in the home.

Now Newark is being taught the folly of its admonition. Newark is soon to celebrate its 250th anniversary, and great plans are being made. But plans need execution, and in all such matters the aid of women has been found of greatest value. With this in view, Newark men relented sufficiently from their attitude in the suffrage election to name two women on the committee of 100 that has the celebration in charge. Two women to 98 men—a generous concession, and counted upon to enlist the co-operation of hundreds of other women in subordinate positions doing the real work.

But when enlistment began it was discovered that the admonition conveyed in the suffrage vote was being heeded only too well. One prominent woman, noted for her energy and ability, answered: "Why, no; I can not help you. I have been remanded to my home by the men of Newark." Another, usually much to the fore in civic effort, declared: "I should think not. Any work I do will be for suffrage. When we win that I'll be free for other things." A young business woman replied: "I am too busy seeking a husband to make a home for me into which I can retire, as advised." Others refused to help Newark celebrate the fact that it was not merely 250 years old, but 250 years behind the times.

It is a whole lesson for Newark, and we hope it will be well rubbed in.

Photographing Flying Birds.

From Outing Magazine.

In photographing flying birds the main point is speed. A fast plate, a fast lens, a fast shutter and fast work is the combination that gets the picture. Having the first three named articles I began trying to improve my part of the operation, and soon learned that focusing used up most of the fraction of a second that the birds are in range. Then I determined to learn to point the camera at an object and get it focused properly without taking time to look at the ground glass or finder. My desire was to reach that stage of rapid movement and quick judgment of distance where I could throw the camera into position, twist the focusing screw, press the trigger, and stop a flying bird, much as a good quail shot can snapshoot quail that are flushing wildly in high brush. I have not attained perfection, but this snapping by judgment has often helped, as it did with my next picture.

A murmur of voices from the library told me that someone had arrived, and when I reached the door, I saw that it was the doctor and the nurse. The former was just rising from a rapid examination of the quivering figure on the couch.

"We must get her to bed at once," he said, turning to Godfrey. "Her bed room's upstairs, I suppose."

"Yes," said Godfrey. "Shall I show you the way?"

The doctor nodded and, lifting the girl carefully in his arms, followed Godfrey out into the hall. The nurse picked up a medicine case from the floor and followed after.

I had expected Swain to rush forward to the couch, to make a scene, perhaps, and had kept my hand upon his arm, but to my astonishment he did not so much as glance in that direction. He stood patiently beside me, with his eyes on the floor, and when my restraining hand fell away, he walked slowly to the chair in which he had been sitting and dropped into it, relaxing limply as with fatigue.

Godfrey was back in a moment.

"That doctor was the nearest one I could find," he said. "He seems to be all right. But if Miss Vaughan isn't better in the morning I'll get a specialist out."

"Godfrey," I said in a low tone, "there's something the matter with Swain," and I motioned to where he sat, flaccid and limp, apparently half asleep. "He is suffering from shock, or something of that sort. It's something more, anyway, than overwrought nerves. He seems to be only half conscious."

"I noticed it," said Godfrey, with a little nod. "We'll have the doctor look at him when he comes down," and he sank wearily into a chair. "This has been a pretty strenuous night, Lester."

"Yes, and it isn't over yet. I wonder what the man with the snake is doing?"

"Still staring into the crystal, no doubt. Do you want to go and see?"

"No," I said decidedl, "I don't. Godfrey," I added, "doesn't the absence of servants seem strange to you?"

"Very strange. But, I dare say, we'll find them around somewhere—though they seem to be sound sleepers! We didn't look through the whole house, you know. I'm not going to, either. I'm going to let the police do that. They ought to be here pretty soon. I told Simmonds to bring two or three men with him."

I glanced at the huddled body of the murdered man. With all the night's excitements and surprises, we had not even touched upon that mystery. Not a single gleame of light had been shed upon it, and yet it was the center about which all these other strange occurrences revolved. Whose hand was it had thrown that cord about the throat and drawn it tight? What motive lay behind? Fearsome and compelling must the motive be to drive a man to such a crime! Would Simmonds be able to divine that motive, to build the case up bit by bit until the murderer was found? Would Godfrey?

I turned my head to look at him. He was lying back in his chair, his eyes closed, apparently lost in thought, and for long minutes there was no movement in the room.

At last the doctor returned, looking more cheerful than when he had left the room. He had given Miss Vaughan an opiate and she was sleeping calmly, the nervous trembling had subsided and he hoped that when she waked she would be much better. The danger was that brain fever might develop, she had evidently suffered a very severe shock.

"Yes," said Godfrey, "she discovered her father strangled in the chair yonder."

"I saw the body when I came in," the doctor remarked, imperturably. "So it's her father, is it?"

"Yes."

"And strangled you say?"

Godfrey answered with a gesture, and the doctor walked over to the body, glanced at the neck, then disengaged one of the tightly clenched hands from the chair arm, raised it and let it fall. I could not but envy his admirable self control.

"How long has he been dead?" Godfrey asked.

"Not more than two or three hours," the doctor answered. "The muscles are just beginning to stiffen. It looks like murder," he added, and touched the cord about the neck.

"It is murder."

"You've notified the police?"

"They will be here soon."

I saw the doctor glance at Godfrey and then at me, plainly puzzled as to our footing in the house, but if there was a question in his mind he kept it from his lips and turned back again to the huddled body.

"Any clew to the murderer?" he asked, at last.

"We have found none."

And then the doctor stopped suddenly and picked up something from the floor beside the chair.

"Perhaps this is a clew," he said, quietly, and held to the light an object which, as I sprang to my feet, I saw to be a blood-stained handkerchief.

He spread it out under our eyes, handling it gingerly, for it was still damp, and we saw it was a small handkerchief—of delicate texture. It was fairly soaked with blood, and yet in a peculiar manner, for two of the corners were much crumpled but quite unstained.

The doctor raised his eyes to Godfrey's.

"What do you make of it?" he asked.

"A clew, certainly," said Godfrey, "but scarcely to the murderer."

The doctor looked at it again for a moment, and then nodded. "I'd better put it back where I found it, I guess," he said, and dropped it beside the chair.

And then, suddenly, I remembered Swain. I turned to find him still drooping forward in his chair, apparently half asleep.

"Doctor," I said, "There is someone else here who is suffering from shock," and I motioned toward the limp figure. "Or perhaps it's something worse than that."

The doctor stepped quickly to the chair and looked down at its occupant. Then he put his hand under Swain's chin, raised his head and gazed intently into his eyes. Swain returned the gaze, but plainly in only a half conscious way.

"It looks like a case of concussion," said the doctor, after a moment. "The left pupil is enlarged," and he ran his hand rapidly over the right side of Swain's head. "I thought so," he added. "There's a considerable swelling. We must get him to bed." Then he noticed the bandaged wrist. "What's the matter here?" he asked, touching it with his finger.

"He cut himself on a piece of glass," Godfrey explained. "You'd better take him over to my place, where he can be quiet."

"I've got my car outside," said the doctor, and together he and I raised Swain from the chair and led him to it.

He went docilely and without objection, and 10 minutes latter, was safely in bed, already dozing off under the influence of the opiate the doctor had given him. "He'll be all right in the the morning," the latter assured me. "But he must have got quite a blow over the head."

"I don't know what happened to him," I answered. "You'll come back with me, won't you?"

"Yes, I may be useful," and he turned the car back the way we had come. "Besides," he added, frankly, "I'm curious to learn what happened in that house tonight."

He had certainly shown himself equal to emergencies, I reflected, and I liked his voice and his manner, which was cool and capable.

"My name is Lester," I said. "I am a lawyer staying with Mr. Godfrey. We heard Miss Vaughan scream and ran over to the house, but we don't know any more than you do."

"My name is Hinman, and I'm just a country doctor," said my companion, "but if I can be of any help, I hope you'll call upon me. Hello!" he added, as we turned through the gate into the grounds of Elmhurst, and the throw on the brake sharply, for a uniformed figure had stepped out into the glare of our lamps and held up his hand.

The police had arrived.

CHAPTER IX

FIRST STEPS

We found a little group of men gathered about the chair in which sat the huddled body. Two of them I already knew. One was Detective-sergeant Simmonds, and the other Coroner Goldberger, both of whom I had met in previous cases. Simmonds was a stolid, unimaginative, but industrious and efficient officer, with whom Godfrey had long ago concluded an alliance offensive and defensive. In other words, Godfrey threw what glory he could to Simmonds, and Simmonds such stories as he could to Godfrey, and so the arrangement was to their mutual advantage.

Goldberger was a more astute man than the detective, in that he possessed a strain of Semitic imagination, a quick wit, and a fair degree of insight. He was in his glory in a case like this. This was shown by his gleaming eyes and the trembling hand which pulled nervously at his short, black moustache. Goldberger's moustache was a good index to his mental state—the more ragged it grew, the more baffling he found the case in hand.

Both he and Simmonds glanced up at our entrance and nodded briefly. Then their eyes went back to that huddled figure.

There were three other men present whom I did not know, but I judged them to be the plain clothes men whom Simmonds had brought along at Godfrey's suggestion. They stood a little to one side until their superiors had completed the examination.

I didn't stop to pick up my physician Goldberger was saying. "But the cause of death is plain enough."

"Dr. Hinman here is a physician," I said, bringing him forward. "If he can be of any service."

Goldberger glanced at him, and was plainly favorably impressed by Hinman's dark, eager face, and air of intelligence and self control.

"I shall be very glad of Dr. Hinman's help," said Goldberger, shaking hands with him. "Have you examined the body, sir?"

"Only very casually," answered Hinman. "But it is evident that the cause of death was strangulation."

"How long has he been dead?"

Hinman lifted the stiff hand again and ran his fingers along the muscles of the arm.

"About four hours, I should say."

Goldberger glanced at his watch.

"That would put his death at a little before midnight. The murderer must have come in from the grounds, crept up behind his victim, thrown the cord about his neck and drawn it tight before his presence was suspected. The victim would hardly have remained seated in the chair if he had known his danger. After the cord was round his throat, he had no chance—he could not even cry out. There's one thing I don't understand, though," he added, after a moment. "Where did that blood come from?" and he pointed to the dark spots on the collar of the white robe.

Hinman looked up with a little exclamation.

"I forgot. I forgot," he said. "Did you find the handkerchief? No. I see you didn't," and he pointed to where it lay on the floor. "I noticed it when I first looked at the body."

Without a word, Goldberg bent and picked up the blood stained handkerchief. Then he and Simmonds examined it minutely. Finally the coroner looked at Godfrey, and his eyes were very bright.

CHRISTMAS MUSIC.

From the American Magazine.

Music should form a greater part of our Christmas than it does, especially where the children are concerned. The most tuneful music ever written has been built around the theme of the first Christmas. To introduce this music to the child, either through song, instrument or the good phonograph record means making their Christmas a spiritual instead of a material feast.

The old hymns and oratorios should come first in the home Christmas program. Play or sing them over and over again to the children. "Silent Night, Holy Night," the old Breton folk song. "No Candle Was Here and No Fire," Luther's Christmas Lullaby, "Away in a Manger," "The Carol of the Birds and the Flowers," "Good King Wenceslas," "O Come All Ye Faithful," "What Child Is This?" "There Dwelt in Judea," Milton's "Hymn on the Nativity," set to music by David Stanley Smith. "The Holly and the Ivy," "Come, Bring the Christmas Yule Log to the Firing," the old Welsh carol. "Deck the Hall With Boughs of Holly," the old English carol. "Sing We All Merrily Christmas Is Here," and countless others, beautiful and classic.

Next in value to the old carols at Christmas time is the study of one oratorio, that form of music which embodies as no other the religious theme, says the Mothers' Magazine. If a church choir or a school chorus can plan to give an oratorio at Christmas time it will be an uplifting experience for the whole community. At least the main themes of Handel's "Messiah" can be studied at home. They will bring through music, the whole story of Christmas to the children. Handel in this oratorio, presents the glory, the triumph, the peace, the joy of Christmas. There is the inspiring "Hallelujah Chorus," that, with its crashing joy chords, bring audiences thousands strong, to their feet in reverential appreciation. In its "Pastoral symphony" we are carried in imagination to the green hills of Bethlehem, we hear the tinkling sheep bells and wait with the shepherds in the starlight for the dawning of the Christmas miracle. The arias, "Every Valley Shall be Exalted" and "He Shall Feed His Flock Like a Shepherd," show us the tender quality of the divine love as expressed in the conception of Handel. "Come Unto Me," "Comfort Ye My People," and "The Trumpet Shall Sound," strike the worldwide note of comfort and consolation sounded first from the lips of the angels on Bethlehem's plains.

CHRISTMAS COOKERY.

From the Pictorial Review.

A Real English Plum Pudding.

One cup of chopped beef suet (freed of skin and shreds), one cup currants, one cup chopped almonds, three cups raisins (floured), two cups bread crumbs, one teaspoon cinnamon, one grated nutmeg, one-half teaspoon ground cloves, two-thirds cup brown sugar, one-half cup each citron, candied orange and lemon peel.

Mix these ingredients and allow them to stand for a week or 10 days. The day before Christmas add to the fruit the yolks of four beaten eggs, one cup of warmed milk, half a cup of sherry and a half cup of brandy. Pudding is much better boiled in regular molds or in an earthenware bowl with a heavy, unbleached muslin cover tied firmly over the top. The inside of the mold, bowl or bag, whichever is used, is well greased and flour sifted over the grease to prevent the pudding sticking. If the mixture is made into three smaller puddings instead of one large one, there will be less danger of its being insufficiently cooked in the middle. The mixture should lack half an inch of reaching the top of the mold, and the water in the vessel in which it is boiled should come only to an inch from the top of the mold. If the water comes higher it will come over the pudding when it begin to dance about. Let the water slowly, merely simmer for six hour. On Christmas day the pudding is placed in an pan and steamed for an hour, a twig of holly is stuck in the middle and just before serving the brandy is set ablaze. The plum pudding is generally served with hard sauce, flavored with whisky.

CHRISTMAS IN A HOSPITAL.

From Mary Roberts Rinehart's "The Street of Seven Stars."

A hospital in festivity is very affecting. It smiles through its tears. And in every assemblage there are sharply defined lines of difference. There are those who are going home soon, God willing; there are those who will go home some time after long days and longer nights. And there are those who will never go home and who know it. And because of this the ones who are never going home are most festively clad, as if, by way of compensation, the nurses mean to give them all future Christmases in one. They receive an extra orange, or a pair of gloves, perhaps—and they are not the less grateful because they understand.

And when everything is over they lay away in the bedside stand the gloves they will never wear, and divide the extra orange with a more fortunate one who is almost recovered. Their last Christmas is past.

"How beautiful the tree was!" they say. Oh, "Did you hear how the children sang? So little, to sing like that! It made me think—of angels."

Three Hundred Million Bushel Crop in 1915

Farmers pay for their land with one year's crop and prosperity was never so great.

Regarding Western Canada as a grain producer, a prominent business man says: "Canada's position today is sounder than ever. There is more wheat, more oats, more grain for feed, 20% more cattle than last year and more hogs. The war market in Europe needs our surplus. As for the wheat crop, it is marvelous and a monument of strength for business confidence to build upon, exceeding the most optimistic predictions."

Wheat averaged in 1915 over 25 bushels per acre
Oats averaged in 1915 over 45 bushels per acre
Barley averaged in 1915 over 40 bushels per acre

Prices are high, markets convenient, excellent land, low in price either improved or otherwise, ranging from $12 to $30 per acre. Free homestead lands are plentiful and not far from railway lines and convenient to good schools and churches. The climate is healthful.

There is no war tax on land, nor is there any conscription. For complete information as to best locations for settlement, reduced railroad rates and descriptive illustrated pamphlet, address Superintendent of Immigration, Ottawa, or

DRINK HOT WATER IF YOU DESIRE A ROSY COMPLEXION

Says we can't help but look better and feel better after an inside bath.

To look one's best and feel one's best is to enjoy an inside bath each morning to flush from the system the previous day's waste, sour fermentations and poisonous toxins before it is absorbed into the blood. Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ashes, so the food and drink taken each day leave in the alimentary organs a certain amount of indigestible material, which if not eliminated, forms toxins and poisons which are then sucked into the blood through the many ducts which are intended to suck in only nourishment to sustain the body.

If you want to see the glow of healthy bloom in your cheeks, to see your skin get clearer and clearer, you are told to drink every morning, upon arising, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless means of washing the waste material and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Men and women with sallow skins, liver spots, pimples or pallid complexion, also those who wake up with a coated tongue, bad taste, nasty breath, others who are bothered with headaches, bilious spells, acid stomach or constipation should begin this phosphated hot water drinking and are assured of very pronounced results in one or two weeks.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs very little at the drug store but is sufficient to demonstrate that just as soap and hot water cleanses, purifies and freshens the skin on the outside, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the inside organs. We must always consider that internal sanitation is vastly more important than outside cleanliness, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do.

Candidates Must File Their Papers Earlier

W. S. Allen, secretary of state has put in circulation among the county officials of the state a new booklet showing the changes in election laws made at the last session of the legislature. One of the features in the new legislation is the change in dates on which candidates shall file their nomination petitions

Under the new law candidates for state, judicial, congressional or legislative office shall file their nomination papers with the secretary of state not more than sixty days nor less than forty days before the June primaries. Under the old law filing could be made as late as thirty days before the primary.

Candidates for county office shall file nomination papers with the county auditor not more than sixty days and not less than thirty days before the primary. Formerly candidates could file as late as twenty days before the primary.

Candidates for city office must file petitions with the city clerk not more than forty days and not less than fifteen days before the municipal election. Formerly this filing could be made up to ten days before the primary. The time changes in all elections were made to give election officials time in which to prepare the ballots properly.

The state official also is putting out a pamphlet containing the provisions of the absent voter's law. This law applies to all elections but the school elections, and will be used first in the city election and in the presidential primaries. Ballots can be procured under the absent voter's law not more than fifteen days before the election. They are issued by the county auditor or the clerk, depending on whether it is a city or county election.

...and plays it on one violin is not far short of a marvel. Kubelik played this number in his first Tour of the United States. Miss Crum also gives an interesting group number which is of a descriptive nature. She plays the "Cradle Song" by Schubert which Mischa Elman has arranged and made popular thru the United States; "The Brook" by Boisdeffer in which the accompaniment represents rippling water; and "The Chase" in which Bugle calls and galloping horses' hoof beats are heard. Miss Crum's last number is a whirlwind of technic, being "La Ronde des Lutins" or "Dance of the Goblins" by Bozinni.

Miss Crum's support this year will consist of Miss Marie A Barney, a concert pianiste and soprano soloist and Miss Clare Kvello, a read who also plays piano and sings.

MISS BARNEY
with Edna Earle Crum Concert Party

Miss Barney is a composer of merit and sings and plays some of her own selections. One of the attractive features of her work is her pianologues using "The Boy Who Stuttered and the Girl Who Lisped" successfully.

Miss Kvello uses dialect numbers in her part of the program and is very successful in her child impersonation numbers.

Do not fail to hear these artists when they appear in our Lyceum Course.

Cows, apparently, can not be herded on the "moral suasion" plan. A farmer writes to the "Rural New Yorker" complaining that his imported Scotch collie dogs are too gentle with the stock. These dogs, he says, are very bright and intelligent, and would make good stock dogs if they would only bite the cows "enough to make the cows afraid of them." The dogs are probably hereditarily disposed not to bite their charges, collies having been for generations accustomed to herd sheep. Their indisposition to attack the cows ought to go to their credit, as being genuine collies.

American commercial interests in Greenland rest wholly in obtaining supplies of cryolite from there. The quarries at Ivigtut, at the southern extremity of the land, furnish nearly all the cryolite used in the world. The United States is now importing considerable quantities of this cryolite, its use being in manufacturing opaque glaze for enameling ironware (the imports of which from Europe are now cut off) and in fluxes for electrolytic aluminum and white Portland cement.

That the talking machine needle is more soothing than the hypodermic to a man about to undergo an operation is the statement of Dr. Edmond Krause a western impressario, who recently experienced the table. Best of all, I suffered no reaction. I had no nervous shock." But Napoleon did.

Protectors against rain seem to be the most easily forgotten impedimenta that the traveler carries. During a recent week 157 articles were left in trains of the Chicago & Northwestern railway. Of these, 34 were umbrellas and 15 were raincoats. These articles were probably carried by unusually forehanded travelers, but doubtless the clouds cleared off and the careful citizens became preoccupied in fair weather thoughts.

CONGRESSMAN STEELE FIXES NEW PLAN FOR POSTOFFICE CONTESTS

Full County Central Committee Will Be Allowed to Decide All Controversies.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 24 -Congressman Tom Steele today announced a new plan for making decisions where there are competing aspirants for postoffices in his district. He has formally outlined the new system to all of the democratic county chairmen in the big Eleventh.

Mr. Steele has decided that in all cases where there are competing aspirants for a postoffice he will refer the decision to the full county central committee. That body is expected to make its decision in a formal session, after giving a hearing to the various aspirants, by voting in secret ballot.

It is Mr. Steele's belief that this method will prove more practical than to require an election for postmaster by democratic patrons of a postmaster. He declares that he is unwilling to devote all of his time to settling postoffice controversies and will "pass the buck" to the local organizations.

WARREN COUNTY FARMERS BOOST BOND PLAN FOR ROADS

Indianola, Ia., Dec. 24.—The farmers of Warren county have lined up behind the plan of securing good roads in Iowa through bond issues. Some 300 of the farmers gathered at the last meeting of the county institute yesterday and listened to an address on the good roads questions by State Senator John Foster, of Guthrie Center.

Following the address the institute adopted this resolution: "Resolved, That we extend to the road commission appointed by Governor Clarke our approval of the efforts they are spending in the cause of good roads in Iowa."

The institute also very clearly, though unofficially, took a stand for the township unit system of road improvement, through the issuance of bonds payable by the county. The farmers were emphatic in their declarations that some uniform system of improved roads was necessary in Iowa. They voiced their willingness to lend aid in any way possible toward improving the highways in this county. Hard surfaced roads came in for practically unanimous approval in the talks by individual members of the institute.

WOMAN HELD IN DES MOINES MEMBER OF "DIAMOND GANG"

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 24.—Mrs. Edna Huddleson, arrested as a member of the "diamond gang" here a week ago Sunday, and who has staged an unsuccessful fight for freedom by the Thaw method, is wanted by the Pinkerton National Detective agency.

When Mrs. Huddleson, Raymond Franke and Walter Johnson were arrested pawn tickets for diamonds of considerable value were found. Mrs. Huddleson told police that her husband had jumped out of the window and escaped with a large number of gems.

Yesterday James McDonald, chief of detectives, received a telegram from the Pinkerton agency at Chicago saying that pictures of Mr and Mrs. Huddleson had been identified as those of sneak thieves who robbed the jewelry store of T. J. Dale, Kenosha, Wis., of a tray containing 48 diamond rings. The Pinkerton agency will send to Des Moines after her

CHAS. M. JUNKIN, VETERAN EDITOR, STRICKEN SUDDENLY

Fairfield, Ia., Dec 24 —Charles M. Junkin, prominent Iowa publisher, died at his home here yesterday afternoon, following a stroke of apoplexy earlier in the day Mr Junkin was publisher of the Fairfield Ledger and was associated in the general publishing business with his brothers, Paul S. Junkin, of Creston, and William Junkin, of Chariton.

Mr Junkin was nearly 60 years of age. His father, William M. Junkin, acquired an interest in the Fairfield Ledger in 1853.

At the time of his death Charles Junkin was the First district member of the republican state central committee, and took a prominent part in republican councils.

Funeral services will be held from the family residence Friday afternoon.

FOUR MEN SENTENCED FOR BANKRUPTCY FRAUDS

Dubuque, Ia, Dec. 24.— Max Schweitzer, Sam Robinowitz, Sam Fetterman and Arthur Roberts, found guilty in federal court on a charge of conspiring to secrete and conceal the property of Arthur Roberts and withhold the goods and proceeds derived from them from the trustee in bankruptcy, D. H. White, of Charles City, yesterday withdrew their application for a new trial and accepted sentence. Fetterman was fined $3,000 Schweitzer received a year and a day in Leavenworth, and Roberts and Robinowitz each two years The pronouncing of sentence was the last chapter in a series of fraud operations that is said to have extended throughout Iowa, Nebraska and Minnesota

PAROLED CONVICT CAUGHT IN BLACK HAND ATTEMPT

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Dec. 24.—Owen Bruce, a barber living at Central City, was brought here and bound over to the Linn county grand jury on the charge of sending a blackhand letter to L. O. Hatch, a lumberman at Central City. Bruce tacked a notice on the door of Hatch's office demanding $500; threatening to destroy the lumber yard if the demand was not complied with.

Hatch placed a $20 bill in an envelope and deposited it in the spot designated. Bruce appeared for the money and, at a given signal, several men dashed up in autos and captured him. Bruce has served time before, but had been paroled.

CLAIMED NEW LAW ON BOOTLEGGERS MAY BE APPLIED TO SPOTTER

This Contention Raised In Des Moines Case and Attracts Much Attention.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 24.—Judge Utterback held today that under the Iowa statute a man who takes money, buys booze from a blindpig and delivers it to the purchaser, is a bootlegger. The court sustained the Des Moines police department and overruled the contention of the county attorney. Under this interpretation, attorneys hold that "spotters," sent out to buy liquor for the police or the Anti-Saloon league, may be prosecuted for bootlegging.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 22.—If a person, who acts as an agent for another person and purchases liquor for him, can be prosecuted under the bootlegging laws of the state, then the police officers who have been acting as special liquor ferrets, and who have gone out and bought liquor, as evidence for the police department, are liable under the law, according to Attorney Earl DeFord.

This is the contention raised yesterday by Attorney DeFord when Al Graves, the subject of the police test case to interpret the bootlegging law, was haled before Judge Utterback in the district court on injunction proceedings begun by John B. Hammond.

Hammond was represented in court by Attorneys McClelland and Powers. Graves was defended by Attorneys McHenry and DeFord. At the close of the testimony Judge Utterback took the case under advisement and may render a decision today.

The action begun by Graves has attracted wide attention, as it is one growing out of the tempest that has raged between city police officials and attorneys of the county attorney's office on the contention whether a man, acting as an agent for another person, can be prosecuted as a bootlegger when he does not handle the liquor for a profit.

Attorney DeFord went further by declaring if an agent can be prosecuted, then special police officers, acting as agents and buying whisky for evidence, can be prosecuted.

Two questions are now before the court to decide.

The first is: Did Graves buy liquor for the men as charged?

The second is: If Graves did buy the liquor for Root and Murphy, as complained of, does his act constitute a violation of the law relative to bootlegging?

SOLOMON OUTDONE; DADS TO PAY BILLS

Fort Dodge, Ia., Dec. 24.—Ten Fort Dodge girls who gave themselves a year in which to walk 500 miles each without counting shopping, calling or dancing, have completed the task. As a result there are no losers to banquet them and they have agreed that the fathers of the hikers should dine them instead. Acting on that decision, they are going ahead with elaborate banquet plans and will send the bills to father.

IDA GROVE GOES "DRY" IN ADVANCE OF "BIG SHOW"

Ida Grove, Ia, Dec 24—After 19 years' continuously as a saloon town Ida Grove will go "dry," Tuesday, December 28, that being the date on which the license under which the one saloon is now operating by permission of the city council. George Walsh, the proprietor, states that the doors of his place of business will close and that the furniture and fixtures will be shipped to Jefferson, S. D., where his brotherinlaw now is engaged in operating a saloon. Until the saloon limit law was enacted Ida Grove had three saloons. In reducing to the population figures Mr. Walsh and D C. Barnes, consolidated.

Mr. Barnes came to Ida Grove from Sioux City in May, 1896, and in partnership with D P Green, of Correctionville, they opened a saloon in a property isolated from the business section of the town Mr Barnes later acquired the business and purchased a building in the business part of the city and he has continued in the liquor business ever since, his family moving back to Sioux City in later years, but Mr. Barnes has made this his home. It is conceded by both the business and church elements that his handling of the liquor traffic has been as near satisfactory as it could be, as his place of business has never been closed on injunction proceedings during its 19 years' existence.

Mr. Barnes expects to remain in Ida Grove for some time at least, and will use his saloon building as an office.

IOWA AUTO LICENSES FOR 1915 NUMBER 145,024

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 24 —When the registration of automobiles for 1915 closed yesterday the records in the office of W. S. Allen, secretary of state, showed 145,024 cars owned and operated in Iowa during the year The total fees collected by the department amount to $1,393,306.67.

There was an increase of 38,937 automobiles in Iowa, compared with the records of 1914. The total number of cars registered last year was 106,087.

While the last automobile plate issued this year was 152,024, it is necessary to deduct 7,000 from that number to get the net number of cars, as the first 7,000 numbers were reserved for motorcycles.

There were 7,049 motorcycles registered in 1915.

LE MARS—Earl, the young son of Mr and Mrs. Sheeler, living east of Kingsley, was kicked on the head by a horse and will probably die. The boy was found by his sister lying in the barn after she had missed him from the house for some time. His parents were away at a sale at the time the accident happened.

M'CLAUGHRY CRITICISED FOR MILITARY CUSTOMS AT PEN

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 22.—The state board of control has called Warden McClaughry before it and will request him to abandon the present military system at Anamosa reformatory. Under the military system guards and prisoners are required to salute and orders are issued and obeyed in military fashion. The board opposes the military system and favors an extension of the honor system that is in vogue at Fort Madison. McClaughry's reappointment is said to depend upon his willingness to revise his system.

IOWA OFFICIALS ARE PREPARING TO FIGHT INCREASES IN RATES

Will Ignore National Commission and Take Case Into Federal Courts.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 23.—State officials say that it is virtually assured Iowa will act independently in the proposed action in the federal court to prevent the railroads from putting the 2.4 cents per mile interstate passenger rate into effect.

George Cosson, attorney general; Clifford Thorne, J. H. Wilson and John A. Guiher, members of the state railroad commission will leave tonight for Omaha where they will confer tomorrow with officials from Minnesota, North Dakota South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas and Oklahoma. The question to be discussed is whether all of the states will fight the advance in passenger rates granted by the Interstate Commerce commission, and whether the suits will be filed in the federal court at the same time.

The case will be handled entirely by the attorney general and the commerce counsel, and not by the railroad commissions, it is explained. There is no chance whatever of reopening the case by applying for a rehearing before the Interstate Commerce commission, it is said.

The action to be taken by the Iowa officials will not only be to prevent the railroads from increasing interstate passenger fares to and from Iowa points, but to prevent the roads from raising the fares between points in Iowa

BUSINESS MEN'S LEAGUE TO AID IN LAW ENFORCEMENT

Des Moines, Ia., Dec 23.—The Business Men's Temperance Association of Iowa will have an officer in every "wet" town in the state after January 1 to see that the state wide prohibition regulation is enforced. These officers will co-operate with the attorney general's office and will be empowered to arrest violators of the prohibitory law. Attorney General Cosson today stated that he would assume personal charge of the fight to enforce the prohibitory law and would go to Davenport, where the most serious trouble is anticipated. He sent word today to the treasurer of Carroll county not to accept the mulct law tax that will be presented for the saloon keeper granted a renewal of license at Manning Saturday. The attorney general warned the county treasurer that to accept this mulct tax would make him a party to the law violation.

Thus far no other city or town council than the one at Manning has granted a renewal license of a permit to operate a saloon after January 1, but confidential advices have come to the attorney general's office that such a step is being considered in Scott county, in which Davenport is located. A meeting of the liquor forces was held there last week to determine plans Nothing was made public following this meeting

MURDER CHARGE DROPPED AGAINST JOHN FRAZIER

Winterset, Ia Dec. 23 —The charge of murdering Rufus Ulery, a Webster, Ia., merchant, was dismissed today in the case of John Frazier. His brother, George Frazier, was found guilty of second degree murder yesterday by a jury that heard his trial on the same charge.

Prosecutor Phil Wilkinson stated he did not have sufficient evidence against John Frazier to press a charge at this time. George Frazier will be sentenced tomorrow as also will Fred Meyer the young farmer found guilty of second degree murder in connection with the death of his wife July 25 last.

The trial of Mrs Ida Meyer, mother of Fred Meyer, on the charge of complicity in the murder of her son's wife, has been postponed until the February term of court

NEUWEEHNER RETURNS TO FACE VARIOUS SHORTAGES

Dubuque Ia, Dec 23 —Frank J Neuweehner, formerly in charge of the savings department of the German Trust & Savings bank, treasurer of St Aloysius society, and treasurer of Marquette court, Catholic Order of Foresters, who disappeared two weeks ago, shortages in his accounts at the bank and in the secret societies developing, returned to Dubuque this morning and announced his intention to assist in straightening out the various affairs.

That a shortage exists in each of the three accounts has been established although the juggled condition of the records has prevented a full checking up. With Neuweehner's assistance the work is likely to be completed in a few days

Although denying himself to newspaper men, members of his family stated remorse combined with fear of arrest drove him back home to "face the music"

THORNE PROMOTION URGED BY WALL STREET JOURNAL

Des Moines, Ia. Dec 23 Clifford Thorne, chairman of the Iowa railroad commission, has been suggested by the Wall Street Journal for appointment to the Interstate Commerce commission, providing that body is increased from seven to nine members

The suggestion aroused considerable interest among Iowa state officials yesterday Mr Thorne declined to discuss the rumor that he would be considered for appointment to the commission He pointed out that Iowa already has one member of the commission

The position carries a salary of $10,000 a year.

The suggestion that the membership of the commission be increased, comes from the commission itself.

CARROLL—William Dargfriede, aged 30, of Arcadia, was found hanging in the toilet room of the Northwestern station in Carroll. He had committed suicide. The motive has not been disclosed Dargfriede had twice before attempted to kill himself. In this instance he had tied a small cord about a coat hook in the toilet room and he had to lift his feet some distance from the floor in order to strangle himself. He was a widower and had recently been cared for by a nephew in Nebraska.

SUES LAWYER ON CHARGE OF ALIENATING AFFECTIONS

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 21.—Alleging that he interfered with the marital relations with his wife and alienated her affections, E. O. De Board yesterday afternoon filed a suit for $5,000 damages against Attorney Herschel W. Laton.

In one paragraph of the petition De Board avers that Laton told Mrs. De Board her husband was of inferior birth and that she was too good to associate with him

COSSON IS READY TO GIVE "WETS" BATTLE; MULCT REPEAL SOUND

Extension of Saloon Permit at Manning Likely to Result In Ouster Action.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 20.—Attorney General Cosson was taken by surprise in the extension of the saloon permit at Manning for another year. He has expected this fight to be brought on from some of the cities. It is quite probable, among other things, that ouster actions will be instituted against the Manning officials for their plain violation of the state law.

Mr. Cosson said:

"If the 'wets' want a big fight we are ready to give it to them. The mulct law repeal is sound and cannot be successfully attacked. There are many of the saloon men who recognize the uselessness of further fighting and have made arrangements to go into other lines of business. It has become known to us that in several quarters a few who object to going out of business, will make a fight. We are informed of the various moves being made and are ready for the scrap.

"As Manning has extended the permit for operation of saloons, it appears that that city will be one of the battle grounds. I do not care to say anything further regarding our plans."

In Davenport the saloon men held a secret meeting a week ago. Although no statement was made as to what took place at the meeting, it is said that plans were made for the testing of the repeal bill. According to the reported plan at least one saloon in Davenport will be opened Monday, January 3, in violation of the repeal law. The law enforcement officials will cause the arrest of the law violator. The attorneys are discussing several other plans, including the proposal to ask the state courts for an injunction against the enforcement of the law. The saloon men say they will fight on the ground that the legislature can not close saloons until the period for which consent petitions were secured expires. The fact that the saloons are directed to close January 1, instead of July 4, is another point for attack, it is said.

There are now 482 saloons in the state of Iowa. They are located in 121 cities and towns in 23 counties of the state. The counties are: Boone, Bremer, Carroll, Clayton, Chickasaw, Clinton, Crawford, Des Moines, Dubuque, Fayette, Ida, Jackson, Johnson, Linn, Lee, Osceola, Pottawattamie, Plymouth, Scott, Union, Webster and Woodbury.

The saloons at Iowa City, of which there are 10, will close next Wednesday. These are legislated out business by the five-mile law. The Iowa City saloon men are not concerned in the fight on the mulct law repeal, for the reason that the outcome will not in any way affect the Iowa City establishments. They are banished forever.

In Dubuque, Burlington, Cedar Rapids and many other cities the saloon men are preparing to quit business quietly. The county and city officials have instructions not to extend the saloons' permits or accept payment of saloon tax after January 1. The state department of justice will permit the saloon men to ship their stocks out of the state immediately after the first of the year.

There are 15 breweries in Iowa, which also will be turned into other industries. Practically every brewery in the state ceased the manufacture of beer several weeks ago. Most of the owners are planning to operate the plants in the manufacture of other articles

ALLEGED SWINDLERS OF DANBURY MAN ON TRIAL TODAY

Chicago, Ill., Dec. 20.—Lodavine Miller and J. Marion Miller, her brother, alleged swindlers of Thomas (Sentimental Tommy) Foulkes, a farmer, of Danbury, Ia., are scheduled to be placed on trial for the second time in the criminal court here today. They were convicted in the summer of 1911 of operating a confidence game—the alleged mulcting of the farmer of $32,000 and two farms valued at $40,000—but were granted a new trial later.

The case has been set for trial, but it is not certain whether it will be tried in view of a letter turned over to Marvin E. Barnhart, assistant state's attorney, by Miller. The missive bears Foulkes' signature and contains an admission of perjured testimony in the first trial, but Foulkes denies writing it A specimen of his handwriting was taken by the assistant state's attorney for the purpose of comparing it with the writing in the letter. On the report of the expert depends the second trial. If he finds the writing to be identical, Prosecutor Barnhart asserted he would dismiss the charges.

CITY COUNCIL AT MANNING EXTENDS SALOON PERMITS

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 20.—The first open move to oppose the repeal of the mulct law in Iowa was made at Manning Saturday night, when the city council extended until January 1, 1919, the saloon permit of John Frahm. The permit states that Frahm's right to conduct his saloon shall continue until the date named, "or until such time as the general statement of consent shall expire or be revoked." The council was unanimous in the passage of the permit, and it was signed by Mayor Ed Farrell.

Attorney General Cosson, when apprised of the fact, yesterday, said he would personally lead the fight for the enforcement of the mulct law repeal. He said he had not anticipated the opposition from Manning, but had expected it instead from Davenport, where the liquor dealers met last week to plan their future moves.

BROTHER OF LEMARS MAN NEW AMBASSADOR TO CHILE

LeMars, Ia., Dec. 20.—Joseph C. Lawler, of LeMars, today received notice that his brother, D. W. Lawler, of St. Paul, had been named ambassador to Chile, South America, by President Wilson. D. W. Lawler has been prominent in Minnesota politics for many years, having been a candidate for governor against Knute Nelson, present United States senator, when he first ran for that office.

Advices received by the Nippon sen Kaisha Steamship Co that the Yasaka Maru was torpedoed without warning that she sank in 40 minutes. The occurred in the afternoon of D and it was made light when the passengers and crew were rescued by French gunboat

London, Dec -The new Japanese liner Yasaka Maru which was in the eastern Mediterranean by a submarine, while the steamer was on her way from London to Japan, with passengers and crew of 169 aboard was sent to the bottom without warning, according to a report received from Port Said from the agents of the owners. All of those on board the ship, including one American passenger, W. J. Leigh were saved. The nationality of the submarine is not mentioned by the agents and previous reports referred to the sinking of the ship as done by either an Austrian or a German submarine

The Yasaka Maru was sunk Thursday afternoon A French gunboat picked up the passengers and crew at midnight and landed them at Port Said Wednesday morning. The company provided hotel accommodations for them and is arranging to forward them to their destinations. On the passenger list were 51 men, 54 women and 15 children, most of whom are British subjects. The agents in their report say further

"The passengers express great admiration for the skill of the captain and officers and for the discipline of the crew. Perfect order was maintained during the disembarkation which was carried out with the greatest promptitude"

The nature of the cargo of the Japanese steamer Yasaka Maru is a mystery, but it is stated that from a financial standpoint the loss is the heaviest sustained in any similar instance of the war.

GARRISON SCORES OYSTER BAY SAGE

War Secretary Denies Roosevelt Has Patent on Preparedness Issue—Colonel Flays Wilson.

Washington D C Dec 24 The feud between Col Theodore Roosevelt and Secretary of War Garrison has broken out again. In the January Metropolitan, the colonel goes after the administration's preparedness program rough shod. Secretary Garrison who is the democratic David attacking the Oyster Bay Goliath comes back with documentary evidence that the colonel is not the disciple of preparedness he professes to be, but that when president, he reduced the strength of the standing army by 11,500 enlisted men

Whose Policies? "Mine."

It is a merry war Politicians are enjoying it, everybody is enjoying it Here is the Roosevelt on shaft that provoked the latest thrust from Secretary Garrison

"Mr Wilson a year later, has finally adopted my principle about preparedness, although he has sought to apply it in a half hearted and inefficient manner A year after I denounced peace at any price, he followed suit quoting the verses of Ezekiel which for months I had been quoting a year after I had attacked hyphenated Americanism Mr Wilson followed suit—at least before the Colonial Dames, and now he accepts my doctrine of America's duty to neutral nations which a year ago he stoutly opposed.

Teddy's Xmas Present.

And then Mr Garrison comes right back with this

'I observe that Mr Roosevelt celebrates the Christmas season by presenting himself with all the good things in sight

"He says in effect 'all policies (which are now popular) are mine. He resembles the eager boy who comes in from play to find a table full of goodies prepared by his elders and, touching all the most toothsome says, 'That's mine, and that's mine and so's that'

"Preparedness was with him an acquired taste. Others brought it forward and urged it upon the attention of the people, and it was only after he found that it suited their taste that he became vocal in its behalf

First to Reduce Army.

"Standing in awe as I do of Mr Roosevelt, and being fearful of his wrath, it is with hesitation that I point out to him that this administration has not only refrained from following one of his policies, but has, on the contrary, repudiated it

"One of his policies was to reduce the enlisted strength of the army of the United States

"Mr Roosevelt became president on September 14, 1901 On May 31, 1902, the secretary of war (Mr Root) by the direction of the president (Mr Roosevelt), issued an order reducing the enlisted strength of the cavalry from 15,840 to 14,040, of the artillery from 18,862 to 17,742, and of the infantry from 38,520 to 29,880, or a total reduction in the enlisted strength of the United States army of 11,560.

Front Pew Already Taken.

"Mr. Roosevelt is welcomed as a convert upon the issue of preparedness, but the front pew already was filled before his conversion and he must now rely on the strength of his voice for recognition."

Colonel Roosevelt recently defended his course in reducing the strength of the army in the following words

"I could only get public opinion back of me on one thing, the navy or the army, and I selected the navy because it is our first line of defense. When I left office we were next to England as a naval power."

Mr. Garrison's reply to Colonel Roosevelt is generally regarded here as part of a perfected plan to convince the people that President Wilson is a pioneer in the preparedness movement. The purpose of this campaign is to offset the opposite impression made upon the country by the reluctance of the president to advocate a policy of adequate national defense.

HUGE STEEL MERGER VIRTUALLY ASSURED

New Capitalization of Cambria Company to Be Upward of $300,000,000.

New York, Dec. 24.—The proposed merger of Cambria Steel, Youngstown Sheet & Tube company and two or three other steel companies is now virtually assured, J A Campbell, president of the Youngstown company, stated today

The stockholders of the Lackawanna Steel company have not yet agreed to the plan of the proposed merger, but Mr Campbell said he considered that phase of the matter as good as settled.

The interests chiefly concerned believe that the merger will be concluded not later than February 1. Present plans indicate that the capitalization of the new company will be at least $250,000,000, possibly $300,000,000.

BIG CORPORATION TO SHARE PROFIT

International Harvester Company Submits Plan to Let Employes Pay For Stock From Wages.

Chicago, Dec 24 —The International Harvester company announced a plan today to assist its 35,000 employes to become stockholders and sharers in the company's profits.

Under the plan, which becomes effective tomorrow, all employes will have an opportunity to purchase profit sharing certificates in the company, payments for which will be made in monthly installments from their salaries. These certificates, it is provided may be converted into stock at a rate below market value.

To every employe who takes advantage of the offer before March 1, 1916, the company will add to his payments 1 per cent of his earnings annually

Interest will be paid at the rate of 5 per cent per annum on all employes' payments and credits on his profit sharing certificates. In addition to the annual dividends on stock, the company also will pay to the employe an amount equal to the extra dividend which he would receive upon his stock, if the entire excess of the net profits for each year prior to 1921, over an amount equal to 6 per cent of the moneys invested

Provisions is made for postponement of payments in case of illness or unavoidable lay offs. Certificates can be turned into cash at the will of the employe The plan will terminate in January, 1921

REFUSES TO PROSECUTE FOR LETTING BABY DIE

Chicago, Dec. 23.—State's Attorney Maclay Hoyne yesterday refused to prosecute Dr Harry J. Haiselden for not operating on Baby Bollinger, a defective, in an effort to prolong its life. His refusal was voiced in a letter to Attorney General Lucy, who had requested that Hoyne cause the case to be investigated.

Springfield, Ill., There is no law in the state of Illinois whereby Dr. Harry J Haiselden, the Chicago physician who refused to save or prolong the life of the Bollinger baby in that city November 17, can be indicted by a grand jury investigation.

Such was the information received by Attorney General Lucy in a letter from State's Attorney Maclay Hoyne, of Cook county, this morning.

The letter was in reply to a request of the attorney general for an investigation of the case by the Chicago official.

CUMMINS DEFERS DATES OF MINNESOTA SPEECHES

Washington, D. C., Dec. 23.—Senator Cummins has given up the idea of going to Minnesota to make speeches in the holiday season. He will go there later, probably some time in January, and will make a series of speeches. The friends of Senator Cummins in Minnesota think he has a splendid chance of capturing that state's delegation in the March primary.

NEW YORK JURORS INDICT SUSPECTS

Koenig and Associates Are Accused of Military Conspiracy—Breitung Admits Plot Part.

New York, Dec. 23.—Indictments were returned today charging Paul Koenig, chief detective of the Hamburg-American line, and Richard Emil Leyendecker, an antique dealer, with conspiring to dynamite the Welland canal. Edmund Justice, a Hamburg-American line watchman, was also indicted with Koenig on charge of conspiring to secure military information for the German government.

The indictments against Koenig and Leyendecker charge them with conspiring to "set foot in the United States a military enterprise against the Domonion of Canada."

The indictments set forth that a part of this alleged conspiracy was to destroy with dynamite or other means, the Welland canal, leading from Port Colborne, on Lake Erie, to Port Dalhousie, on Lake Ontario.

As a part of the plot to destroy the canal, the indictments allege, Koenig and Leyendecker planned to secure employment for their agents in various factories and mills adjacent to the canal.

Breitung Confesses.

Max Breitung, under indictment with Robert Fay, Dr Herbert Kienzle, Walter Scholz and Paul Daesche, on charges of conspiring to blow up munition ships leaving this country, today admitted through his attorney, John B. Stanchfield, that he bought 350 pounds of chlorate of potash for Fay. The admission was made when Mr. Stanchfield moved for a separate trial for Breitung.

Breitung purchased the potash, one of the chief components in certain forms of explosives at Fay's request, Mr Stanchfield said, and in so doing acted in good faith and was entirely innocent of any plan to destroy ships. Decision on the motion was put over until January 3, when decisions on similar motions by two of the other defendants will be rendered.

William McCaulley, whose name was first given as Robert McCauley and who was taken to police headquarters at the request of department of justice officials investigating the plot to dynamite the Welland canal, was released today after having been questioned by federal officials.

Although McCulley admitted having known Paul Koenig, chief of the Hamburg-American line detectives, who is accused by the government of having formulated the Welland canal plot, for five years, and having recently been in his employ as a "trailer," federal officials said there was nothing to warrant holding the man.

The military force which the indictments charge Koenig and Leyendecker planned to send from this country, was also intended to destroy "various plants and properties in Canada other than the Welland canal."

Koenig and Justice are charged in the indictments with having conspired in the United States to secure for the German government information regarding the character and quantity of munitions and other war materials being sent from Canada to Great Britain.

In this connection, it is charged that Justice made trips to Portland, Me.; Burlington, Vt., and Quebec, Can., during, September, 1914, and that all of these trips were a part of the conspiracy to secure military information for the German government.

Koenig in his various activities is alleged to have been known under the aliases of Wagner, Wegenkamp, Kelly, Winter and Perkins, while Leyendecker was known as Z. D. Decker and R. Decker.

The indictments, which were drawn by Assistant United States Attorneys Roger Wood and Benjamin A. Matthews, charge that on several of his trips Justice was accompanied by Frederick Metzler, Koenig's stenographer, who was recently arrested and appeared before the federal grand jury which returned the indictments today.

The maximum penalty for the charges is three years' imprisonment and $3,000 fine.

DOG HOSPITAL MANAGER HYDROPHOBIA VICTIM

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 23.—Jarvis Cassidy, aged 76, office manager for Dr. Moline's cat and dog hospital, is in a serious condition following a bite by a supposed mad dog. Four other persons, bitten by the same animal, are taking treatment with some hope of success.

BRITISH BLACK LIST AMERICAN CONCERNS

Those Suspected of Trading With Enemy Discriminated Against, They Complain.

London, Dec. 24 —Various American mercantile and manufacturing firms doing business in Great Britain are said to be suffering losses due to a blacklist which they claim the British government maintains against neutral individuals accused of having affiliations with Great Britain's enemies

Official circles admit that firms suspected of actual trading with the central powers and their allies are objects of suspicion and liable to meet with discriminatory treatment, but it is denied that simply because an American firm may have German stockholders it is placed in the same category as organizations which are known or suspected to be trading with an enemy country

It is pointed out that such treatment would be quite impossible of enforcement without great injustice, for scarcely any large industrial organization is without stockholders of various nationalities Some of the American firms which are suffering as the result of the alleged quiet boycott complain that they are the victims of commercial blackmail levied by British rivals One of the companies which already has suffered greviously has tried in vain to ascertain from the government the nature of the charges against it.

BROTHER OF VILLA IS UNDER ARREST

Colonel Hipolito Villa Taken Back to El Paso to Face Charge of Swindling—Sleeps In Jail.

San Antonio, Tex., Dec. 24.—To forestall habeas corpus procedings by which Colonel Hipolito Villa might have obtained his liberty before documentary proof could have been obtained from El Paso, Colonel Villa, accompanied by a detective, was started for El Paso this morning at 4 50 o'clock

Villa was arrested last night at 11:40 o'clock in the drawing room of the Southern Pacific from the west, the arrest being based on a wire message from the El Paso chief of police charging him with swindling. Villa agreed to return and face the charge without formal court order and even consented to pay his and the detective's fare.

Local officers were informed today that Villa will be met by the El Paso chief some distance east of El Paso and taken to jail to await the fixing of bond on the part of a court.

Villa slept little in San Antonio, although provided with a comfortable room in the city jail.

BRITAIN EXPLAINS INCREASED EXPORTS

War Has Made Islands Trans-Shipment Point—Discrimination Denied.

London, Dec. 23.—The increase in exports of tobacco, resin and petroleum from England has subjected the British government to considerable criticism on the ground that the government, while stopping neutral shipments, is permitting its own shippers to increase their exports. Official circles, while not denying the accuracy of the figures, declare the condition due to a change in ports of distribution instead of any favoritism on the part of the British blockade.

French resin, in normal times, it is pointed out, reached the continent generally through Hamburg and Antwerp, and with both these ports closed England has become a transshipment place. Besides shipping enormous quantities of tobacco to her troops abroad, it is also pointed to Great Britain has now become a distributing center for much of the Chinese, Greek, Egyptian and Rhodesian tobacco, which formerly was handled by continental ports.

American oil companies have imported enormous quantities of petroleum into England, where it is stored preparatory for shipment to the continent when it is wanted there. Great Britain also serves as a storehouse for much petroleum purchased for the use of allied governments, for whom she acts as a distributor.

WOOD SAYS MILITARY PLAN IS WEAK; QUITS

New York, Dec. 23.—Henry A. Wise Wood, representative of the American Society of Aeronautic congress, yesterday announced his resignation as a member of the naval consulting board recently appointed by Secretary of the Navy Daniels. His action was taken, he said, because he disapproves as inadequate for the country's defense the naval program proposed by the administration. He will continue, he said, to serve as a consultant to members of the board.

Mr. Wood says, in his letter of resignation to Secretary Daniels, that he retired "in order that I shall be free to attack the thoroughly inadequate, and therefore dangerously, weak naval and military policy of the president, as expressed in Secretary Garrison's and your own recommendations and to urge publicly that the recommendations of the general board of the navy and the general staff of the army, as contained in their original reports, be substituted therefor."

NOVEMBER BEST MONTH FOR SOUTHERN PACIFIC

New York, Dec. 23.—The enormous increase of $1,086,346 in net earnings reported by the Southern Pacific company today for the month of November is the largest gain for any one month in the company's history Gross earnings increased $3,506,000, with an increase of $1,448,727 in operating expenses.

ANCONA NOTE GIVES BETTER IMPRESSION

Work on Reply Begun at Vienna and Will Be Forwarded Soon.

Vienna, (via London), Dec. 24.—The new American note regarding the Ancona has made a good impression here.

An early answer may be expected Work on it has been begun already.

London, Dec. 23.—"America clearly has made up her mind there shall be no repetition of the evasion which attended the Lusitania correspondence," says the Westminster Gazette.

"The Gazette believes it probable Austria will conciliate the United States rather than take an extreme step, as recall of the American ambassador would be an injury to the central powers, whose present disposition, it says, is to keep on as good terms as possible with America.

Referring to the last American note to Austria, the Manchester Guardian says:

"This was not the mood of the American dispatches to Germany on the sinking of the Lusitania, but there are reasons for the greater severity that is now shown. For Germany, since the sinking of the Lusitania, has promised not to sink passenger steamers without warning and unless they are resisting the right of search. This promise, though made on behalf of Germany, must also be held to bind Austria."

PROSPERITY HITS COPPER INDUSTRY

American Producers Selling to Britain at 20½ to 21 Cents and Contracting Big Orders to Germany.

New York, Dec. 24.—With high grade copper selling at 20½ cents a pound, its highest price since 1907, Wall street looks for another boom in that industry. Metal shares hold the center of speculative attention, American Smelting being most prominent, if not the strongest, while Anaconda, Utah, Inspiration and a half dozen less conspicuous issues followed, all at substantial gains.

It was rumered that a large producing company had practically closed a contract for deliveries all through 1916 to foreign interests, particularly British, at between 20½ and 21 cents. Germany, it is declared, is placing orders here to be delivered after the war, when the amount of copper for "reconstruction" purposes will run into many hundred thousand tons.

Representatives of the leading selling agencies, which distribute the output of the big mines, declined to discuss the matter of copper exports "for obvious reasons," but it is expected that the outflow of the metal from leading ports during the early months of the coming year will break all records.

HOLD PARCEL POST IS PART OF SHIP'S CARGO

London, Dec. 23.—It is understood in official circles here that the British government will take a definite stand on the principle that parcels post matter must be regarded as part of the cargo of a ship and not entitled to the protection given first class mail under the international postal code.

Mail seized recently from the Swiss-American steamer Stockholm, consisted, according to the British government, of parcels post containing goods of German origin. It is believed that the mails seized from the Danish steamer United States, comes under the same category.

BRITISH SEIZE MAIL ABOARD NEUTRAL SHIP

New York, Dec. 23.—The steamer Rotterdam, arriving at New York today from Rotterdam and Falmouth, reported that while detained at Falmouth for two days the British authorities took 39 sacks of mail ashore—18 sacks from Berlin, 11 from Constantinople and 10 from Sofia.

Captain Baron protested that the seizure was illegal, but was obliged to accept a receipt for the mail. He was assured that after the mail had been censored it would be sent by another steamer.

WILL BUY RAIL BONDS FROM FRENCH OWNERS

New York, Dec. 23.—Kuhn, Loeb & Co. announced today the completion of negotiations in Paris for the purchase of bonds of the Central Pacific Railway company, which is controlled by the Southern Pacific company. The bonds are a 4 per cent issue and were sold in 1911 to French banking interests, principal and interest being guaranteed by the Southern Pacific. The total amount of the issue was 250,000,000 francs, or approximately $50,000,000.

FRANCE WAITS REPORT OF CRUISER CAPTAIN

Washington, D. C., Dec. 23.—Ambassador Sharp at Paris today notified the state department that France would not reply to the American note protesting against the removal of Germans and Austrians from American vessels on the high seas by the French cruiser Descartes until the commander of the warship had reported.

The French government is endeavoring to secure a report from the commander.

WILSON AND BRIDE PLAY GAME OF GOLF

Hot Springs, Va., Dec. 23.—The president and Mrs. Wilson made their first appearance on the golf links here today. Other players were on the course and with these the president and his wife chatted during the round.

Mrs. Wilson wore a light blue tailored suit with tan walking shoes and a black toque hat.

We wish you a prosperous New Year.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR SHERIFF

I hereby announce my candidacy for the office of Sheriff of Hancock County, subject to the will of the Republican voters at the June, 1916 primaries. Leo O' Mitchell, Corwith, Iowa.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for Sheriff of Hancock County, Iowa, subject to the decision of the Republican voters at the June, 1916 Primary election. James S. Ross, Britt, Iowa.

I hereby announce myself as a republican candidate for the office of Sheriff of Hancock County, subject to the Voters of this County, at the June Primary 1916. A. E. Baumgartner, Garner, Iowa.

TO THE VOTERS OF HANCOCK COUNTY

I beg to make this statement as a Candidate for the re-nomination to the office of Sheriff of Hancock County.

With due consideration with various voters of the County, I have decided to cast my hat in the ring for another term with all due regards and good will to any other candidate or aspirant to the office. I believe now with Primary election system that fairness and courtesy will be extended to all candidates, and the choice of the people nominated, if it be for the first term or subsequent term. Some years ago it was generally alleged that some certain clique controlled the nomination by the caucus system, but things have changed, we have now a primary election to nominate the Candidates for the several offices.

It is therefor that I feel free to be a Candidate and leave it to the people if they will return me to the office or not, the three years that I have been Sheriff I have endeavored to do my duty without fear or favor and have given the people the best I had and I believe the people who have dealings with this office will bear me out in this statement.

I am asking the voters consideration for another term, because I have been proven in other counties that it is a good plan to give the Sheriff a longer term because he can do better work. The time I have been in office I have had to make a fight for every term that I have served and therefor I feel free to ask for a renomination.

I also think I can better do the duties of the office now with the experience I have had, and because my predecessor held this office three terms and because I have no other position in view.

If no nomination can be made at the primaries, not having the 35 per cent, I will favor the nomination going to the man having the plurality of votes. Thanking you for past favors,

I am yours as before,
A. E. BAUMGARTNER.

Clear, Peachy Skin Awaits Anyone Who Drinks Hot Water

Says an inside bath, before breakfast helps us look and feel clean, sweet, fresh.

Sparkling and vivacious—merry, bright, alert—a good, clear skin and a natural, rosy, healthy complexion are assured only by pure blood. If only every man and woman could be induced to adopt the morning inside bath, what a gratifying change would take place. Instead of the thousands of sickly, anaemic-looking men, women and girls, with pasty or muddy complexions; instead of the multitudes of "nerve wrecks," "rundowns," "brain fags" and pessimists we should see a virile, optimistic throng of rosy-cheeked people everywhere.

An inside bath is had by drinking each morning, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour fermentations and poisons, thus cleansing, sweetening, and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Those subject to sick headache, biliousness, nasty breath, rheumatism, colds; and particulary those who have a pallid, sallow complexion and who are constipated very often, are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store which will cost but a trifle, but is sufficient to demonstrate the quick and remarkable change in both health and appearance, awaiting those who practice internal sanitation. We must remember that inside cleanliness is more important than outside, because the skin does not absorb impurities to contaminate the blood while the pores in the thirty feet of bowels do.

LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT

Take a glass of Salts to flush Kidneys if Bladder bothers you—Drink lots of water.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys; they become overworked, get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, disordered liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

...DS KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

Few Doses Stops Backache, Relieves Rheumatic Pains and Bladder Disorders

It is no longer necessary for any one to suffer with backaching, kidney trouble, have disagreeable bladder and urinary disorders to contend with, or be tortured with rheumatism, stiff joints and its heart-wrenching pains, for the new discovery, Croxone, quickly and surely ends all such miseries.

Croxone is the most wonderful remedy yet devised for the cure of such troubles because it removes the cause. It is entirely different from all other remedies.

It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the clogged up pores; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid, and makes the kidneys filter and sift from the blood all the poisonous waste matter that clog the system and cause such trouble.

It matters not how long you have suffered, how old you are, or what you have used, the very principle of Croxone is such, that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. There is nothing else on earth like it.

If you suffer with pains in your back, and sides, or have any signs of bladder trouble, or rheumatism, such as swellings under the eyes or in the hands and ankles, if you are nervous, tired, all run down, or bothered with sleep disturbing urinary disorders, Croxone will end your misery. An original package costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it fails in a single case.

DRINK HOT TEA FOR A BAD COLD

Get a small package of Hamburg Breast Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teacup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus driving a cold from the system.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

RUB BACKACHE AND LUMBAGO RIGHT OUT

Rub Pain and Stiffness away with a small bottle of old honest St. Jacobs Oil

When your back is sore and lame or lumbago, sciatica or rheumatism has you stiffened up, don't suffer! Get a 25 cent bottle of old, honest "St. Jacobs Oil" at any drug store, pour a little in your hand and rub it right into the pain or ache, and by the time you count fifty, the soreness and lameness is gone.

Don't stay crippled! This soothing, penetrating oil needs to be used only once. It takes the ache and pain right out of your back and ends the misery. It is magical, yet absolutely harmless and doesn't burn the skin.

Nothing else stops lumbago, sciatica and lame back misery so promptly!

Invidious Distinction.

A gentleman one day approached the hosiery counter and asked: "Let me see some ladies' hosiery." The floorman was astonished to hear the clerk reply "Do you want it for your wife or something more expensive?"

Dairy Meetings Will Be Held In School Houses

One of the new moves of the State Dairy Association is to visit the different school houses of chosen sections of the state and give lectures pertaining to dairying and other important farm topics. The Klemme vicinity, through the efforts of the Test Association have been fortunate enough to be one of the places chosen for putting on this work, and E. S. Istel, state dairy expert of Waterloo and T. A. Clark of the Iowa Dairy and Food Commission of Des Moines will be here on January 10, 11 and 12 and their itinery will be as follows:

The Tom Nelson school is Avery township No. 2, on the afternoon of January 10th.

The Fred Walker or Ell Center school on the afternoon of January 11th.

The C. C. Schaefer school in German township No. 2, on the afternoon of January 12th.

These lectures are free to everyone and the parents of the pupils are especially urgently requested to be present. The lectures will be illustrated by the sereopticon and blackboard talks will also be given.

The various school children in these different neighborhoods will pe taken to the different schools so that practically all of the rural school children of the three townships will have the opportunity of taking advantage of this new way of being able to gain this particular knowledge and one that will prove of use and profit to them in after life. There is not any doubt but that dairying is the coming thing and we are glad to see that the school children of this vicinity are going to have this opportunity.

QUARTONS ARE FIGHTING FOR DAIRY INTERESTS

Judge and Sumner Quarton of Algona are busy these days working on the dairy rate cases in the interests of the Iowa State Dairy association and the Iowa Butter-Makers' association, according to the Advance. The question now involved is that of paying the railroads for icing dairy products in the course of transportation. Whenever the railroads asked the Interstate Commerce Commission for an increase in freight rates they were told to charge for services now done free and to practice economy by cutting out unnecessary expenses. The railroads have taken this advice to heart and now propose to charge for refrigeration on dairy products. It is claimed, however, that the charge for refrigeration has always been taken into account as a part of the general freight rate. The dairy interests are fighting the proposed charge for icing. In Chicago it amounts to $500,000 yearly and in St. Louis $400,000. Another question which is engaging the attention of the dairy interests is the carload rate question. The centralized creameries are asking for a low rate on carload shipments east of Chicago. This would be a hard blow to the small western creameries as their shipments are small and they cannot take advantage of a special carload rate. The effect would be to stifle competition of the co-operative creameries. Having the advantage of a lower freight rate the centralizers would offer higher prices, but experience has shown that in the end they would pay lower prices than the co-operative creameries after the latter had been wiped out of existence. In railroad parlance dair products include butter, cheese, eggs and poultry, and all of these products are involved in this controversy.

Harry Macomber, chief mail clerk on the Milwaukee running west out of Dubuque, was killed early Thursday morning at McGregor when he was getting out of the mail car. The train had not stopped and as soon as he opened the door he slipped and fell out of the car rolling under the wheels. He was instantly killed and almost cut in two, one of the car wheels passing over him. An inquest was immediately held and the body was taken to Clear ... the same day. He has lived ... Clear Lake for twenty years, was married and had one daughter. He was a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Masonic fraternities.—Garner Signal.

The farm house occupied by Wm. Myers was burned to the ground yesterday afterday afternoon about half past one. No one was at home at the time and nothing was saved. There was $400 insurance on the property. No other buildings were burned. This loss will be particularly hard in the winter time.—Signal.

As incontrovertable evidence of the strict neutrality of this paper we'll take your $1.00 and never ask if you be English, German, French, Austrian, Russian, Italian, Belgian, Jap, Turk, or the devil. But we believe the latter will have a firm hold on a number of our readers unless they come in and dig up pretty soon.

Sheriff Baumgartner is intimating a third term for office. What is the matter with August? He has made a good officer and is getting onto the duties of the office and can do better work. A little early to discuss it at present, but we notice there are rumors of politics.—Democrat.

The New Year's Card

How It Began and the Many Processes It Went Through.

What an ordinary, uninteresting item in our social life is the modern visiting card! But this was not always so, though it has barely been in existence 150 years. It owed its origin to the custom of writing the name or sometimes a message on the back of a playing card, says a writer in the Washington Post. Occasionally one particular card was chosen with intent, and the duchess of Dorset received an apt epigram in return for one she sent to a well known clergyman. The verses end as follows: "You sent me ten hearts, the tithes only mine. So give me one heart and burn t'other nine."

Toward the end of the last century the visiting cards of the upper classes were veritable works of art, and by their means many most interesting types of engraving survive. They were of varying size, but the majority not larger than about two and a half inches by two inches, while today those used by gentlemen are two inches by one and a half inches and by ladies four inches by two and a half inches. There were many square ones used about 1780 to 1790. One belonging to an English society leader of a century ago dates from Holle street, Cavendish square, a spot associated with Lord Byron. Her husband's card is smaller and has a sketch of the family home in one corner, which still remains in the possession of their collateral descendants. The notion is so good it deserves to be followed, for it would certainly add to the interest of the cards we leave to each other if they bore the semblance of our friends' homes as well as their names.

Another example shows that history repeats itself, for, although issued in the eighteenth century, the lady was "at home on Monday," as many modish dames are now. Visiting en blanc, as it was called—viz., by leaving a card—was a novelty then, and on many which come from Italy "in persona" is written, showing that they had been left and not sent by a servant.

These are the simpler class of cards. A vast number of others in use at this time show the ruling powers in decoration. Hundreds of the decorative designs bear the names of contemporary duchess, or, rather, according to the ancient spelling, "dutchesse"—St. Albans, Bolton and Grafton among the number. The latter, according to Horace Walpole, saved her life by playing loo when in Rome, instead of going to a party at a palace where the roof fell in.

Many of the "tickets," as visiting cards were called in those days, were engraved with architectural buildings in Rome, Berlin and elsewhere, and long in fashion. They were sold in packets. The names were frequently written upon them, and even when they were printed it was rare that one particular pattern was kept for any special person. The head of a well known Warwickshire family during a visit to Rome in 1783 kept, and has handed down, those left by his acquaintance. On these figure the arch of Titus, St. Peter's, the castle of St Angelo and many other lions of Rome.

Not a few of the visiting cards of this period recall nothing so much as the funeral monuments of those days. Sometimes the names appear on well engraved vases, sometimes on chimney pieces. Some are square, with supporting columns, scrolls and curtains, some display festoons of flowers and a variety of animals.

The cognomens of naval officers emerge from the midst of spikes, anchors, ropes, flags and other naval insignia, while military officers appear surrounded by helmets, cannon, tents and soldiers. Artists figure amid palettes, brushes and other adjuncts of the craft, mostly accompanied by a graceful female form, and every kind of musical instrument has been called into play—lyres, harps, trumpets and harpsichords—for musicians. Birds of many kinds hold scrolls bearing the names in their books, or they are written on their breasts or outstretched wings. Animals often play a double part. The name of Hare, for example, is represented as a rebus by that little animal running at full speed, while a goat figured on the fashionable designs of 1785. Archery, agriculture and sport generally left their impress on the visiting card.

About 1816 pure white cards with embossed borders and large embossed letterings were the prevalent mode. History again repeats itself—the daughter's name appeared then with the mother's, as it does now. How many of the titles then extant have died out! It very often happened that the lady's cards and the gentleman's were of the same size, but not always.

For a "ticket" the Duchess of Leeds in 1784 favored a very pretty engraving of a Chinese figure looking over a low doorway, with an Anglicized pagoda at the side. On another card bearing a famous lord's name figures a powerful engraving of the sphinx, with the Egyptian pyramids in the rear.

Many a great dame of those days had her name on her visiting card surrounded by a framework held by Cupids. These were far prettier than the somber looking cards covered with close set, engraved, horizontal lines and a very deep border. Monograms and coronets figured on some of them and have left to posterity fine specimens of steel engraving, but the most elaborate of heraldic cards were generally foreign, and some of the foreign embassies employed colored crests occasionally introduced in the center.

"SYLVESTER ABEND."

A Pretty Custom Observed in Berlin on New Year's Eve.

It was with much pleasant anticipation we awaited the approach of "Sylvester Abend," as they call New Year's eve in Germany, says a writer in The Woman's Home Companion. About 11 o'clock, supper being ended, we all adjourned to the parlor, where the danced until almost midnight. Then refreshments were served. These consisted of queer little cakes made especially for the holiday season, apples, nuts and Berliner pfankuchen, which are perfectly delicious. The latter look like large brown doughnuts covered with sugar. On opening them they are found to be filled with jam. Our Christmas tree was relighted, having been furnished with new candles.

The ringing of the bells announced the beginning of the new year. Guns were fired, and from the church lofts bugles were sounded. Later all the windows were flung wide open, and standing within them, the people held up their glasses and called out, "Prosit Neujahr!" to every one who passed by. People on the street called in to us. Even the droschky coachmen, as they drove by, called out, "Prosit Neujahr!" Of all the pretty customs in Germany I thought this the prettiest. Not only to your friends do you wish a happy new year, but to all.

THE SAME THING.

A New Year's Gift

The Story of a Cuban Convict. By F. A. Ober.

As managing editor of the Patriot, Havana soon became too hot to hold me. Suspected of corresponding with the insurgents, I was hauled before the tyrant Weyler at the palace. This was one morning early. At noon I was aboard a train for Batabano and at night on a steamer for the Isle of Pines, the penal settlement for political convicts.

It might have been worse, of course, for the tribunal might have sent me to Ceuta, on the African coast, where chains and a cell would surely have been my portion. Instead, however, I was confined within the borders of a beautiful island which a bountiful Providence had provided with every gift of nature and deprived only of my friends and my habitual environment.

Soon after my deportation, having been landed at one of the two ports here and finding the wretched town life not to my taste, I wandered away to the eminence known as the Crystal hill, from the summit of which I could look out over the desolate sea and the forest intervening between it and the plantations. These and the town lay on the plain eastward of the hill. Some distance down its western slope I found a yawning mouth of a cave open in the direction of the sea, its farther end somewhere within the bowels of the earth. It was large and dry, with immense natural pillars supporting a roof hung with stalactites, while a stream of clear water issued from its unexplored interior. In its outer chamber I hung a hammock, a fire of gum wood dispensed warmth and perfume when the nights were chilly, and I thought I could be content here for a month at least, or until I could venture back to Havana.

I had money and firearms, and provisions were daily supplied me by a faithful islander whom I had befriended in former times. In the surrounding forest were plants and animals which could afford me sustenance if my supply from town were to be cut off, and I lacked only companionship to make me perfectly contented.

If only Olivia were here—Olivia, my fiancee! If I had but married her before this unfortunate affair! But, no; this was no place for a tenderly nurtured woman like the daughter of the alcalde of San Cristobal.

I sat in the cave's mouth one day at noon. The heat of the plains was most oppressive, but a breeze from the ocean stirred the leaves of the pines. But for their sighing there was no sound to disturb the deathlike calm till an unfamiliar clashing of branches caused me to start and reach out for my rifle, leaning against a rock.

Distracted as I was, I expected nothing less than a visit from the Spanish volunteers, who guarded the island; but, looking up, I saw before me the figure of a girl. She was comely, and her face shone with intelligence, yet I knew that she belonged to the serving class. It was, indeed, Carmela, the devoted maid of my fiancee! She smiled and held out a folded paper. At first my bewildered senses could hardly accept this token of her existence. My vision was blurred, the scene before me swam in a mist, but, murmuring vaguely my thanks, I took the letter, opened it and read:

My father has driven me from his house. Do you love me? Will you welcome me? I am near. Olivia.

I turned to the maid. "Where—where is she?" I demanded, leaping from my hammock. The girl shrugged her shoulders and pointed to the pines on the brow of the hill, but vouchsafed me no other reply.

I scrambled up the rocks, and there, steadying herself against the trunk of a pine, was my sweetheart! She looked at me timidly, in her eyes a mute inquiry, as if doubtful of the reception I would offer. Not long, however, was she hesitant. Then, shaking a finger at me with playful gesture, she said: "Oh, Felipe, you did not think I would come! Now, did you? And now that I have come, do you not think me overbold, or are you glad to see me, to have me bid awhile with you? Now lead me to your cavern. I am tired—faint."

While the maid set the cave in order and my beloved reclined in my hammock, I prepared a simple repast, with cool water from a spring that gushed from the hillside near, and soon set it before her.

After she had partaken and had been refreshed by a siesta she joined me at the cave's mouth, where we sat hand in hand until the plain below was all in shadow, only the white trunks of the palms standing out pallid as ghosts in the gathering gloom.

During the week that followed Olivia and her maid occupied the inner chamber of the cave, which was sacred to their privacy, while I guarded the cave's mouth and the outer room. We both knew well our lives were in the hands of the authorities when her father, Don Amadeo, should overcome his pride and command the inevitable search for his daughter. It could not be long deferred, and so we lived in daily apprehension of capture and separation, yet were happy.

The knowledge of impending sorrow only gave present joys a keener zest. It seemed impossible to escape from the island, closely guarded as it was. Yet I made my preparations. Far down below us was the solitary shore of a land locked bay, beyond which were innumerable days, and still farther off the ocean. Neither sea nor shore was often visited, save now and then by a smuggler or filibuster.

Every day at sunrise, Olivia and her maid accompanying, I went down to the land-locked harbor and worked upon a great raft of bamboo, which, when finished, I launched and anchored in the placid bay behind the coral reefs. Day by day thereafter during the whole of Christmas week I carried down clothing, provisions, arms and ammunition until at last our frail craft was laden with everything necessary for a voyage.

Four days passed after we were ready before we saw a sail upon the ocean. It was late in the afternoon of the last day of December, when, sitting in the shade of the cave, Olivia pointed out a speck upon the waves. She looked long and earnestly, then said:

"Dearest, it is a ship, and it is coming toward our island."

"Will you venture?" I asked.

"Certainly," she answered, smiling into my eyes. "But first let me be indeed sure it is approaching."

Half the distance had been traversed, and, though darkness now overspread the ocean, we could still make out the ship's position by her lights. The sea became rougher and more turbulent, and suddenly I sensed a new danger. While I was watching the foam crested billows sweeping toward us in order to avoid them I saw in their dark hollows rapidly moving streaks of phosphorescence.

We were beset by sharks! Their flaming fins were cleaving the water all about us. The black waves were alive with them.

But the bark was looming steadily before us. In another half hour we should be within hail even if she did not sooner see us and lower a boat. Perhaps I was made too confident by this assurance, but, without warning, a fierce wave assailed us, and the raft was overturned. The same wave carried my sweetheart away into the darkness, but I swam swiftly to her side and thrust out an arm to draw her to my shoulder for support.

But that instant, as her eyes looked lovingly into mine, a cry burst from her lips, and she sank beneath the waves. I clutched at her dress and strove to raise her, but my strength was unavailing as against that of the monster that had seized her.

Down, down, below the turmoil of waves and roaring billows we sank together. I wrenched my knife from its sheath, and in my fury plunged it into the man-eater's body, gray and ghastly, alongside of me. The grim jaws relaxed their hold, and, dragging the apparently lifeless form to the surface, I bore it to the raft and cast myself down beside her. There while the waves swept over us, while the fins of the sharks hissed and gleamed in the foaming waters, I called to her, bent over her, pressed my lips to hers.

Then, overcome by fatigue and despair, I swooned by her side.

* * * * * * *

From a dreamless sleep, from hovering on the borders of oblivion, I was awakened by strange voices. I was on the deck of a ship. I saw forms of men pass vaguely before me, and by my side—yes, there alive—sat one whom I had thought no longer living.

Her shining eyes looked into mine again, and then she told me of our rescue from the waves. The night had passed, and now the dawn had come, and with its coming the fluttering of sails and the rattling of anchor chain informed us that a port was reached. It was that of Grand Cayman, to the southeast of Isle of Pines, a neutral port, and we were safe.

We were married that day at noon, and thus was achieved the consummation of our happiness. And the captain of the bark, who himself had taken Olivia from the raft, said solemnly as he placed her hand in mine:

"Her life belongs to me, for I saved it, but it is also yours because she gave it to you. That was yesterday, and hence last year, this is today, and hence the new year. That which perished in the old year the new year sees restored to life. God bless you both and sanctify this New Year's gift."—Buffalo Evening News.

Old Time New Year's Customs

"Setting Up" in Years Gone By. The Dutch and Their Calls.

"Goin' to sit up tonight?"

"I reckon—yes, I reckon I will. Nuthin' in it, y' know, but lots o' fun and fresh cider."

Such a conversation might have been heard in any rural region of the central west some forty years ago on any New Year's eve. And the "setting up" was the one and only point in which New Year's observations differed from those of Christmas. The Knickerbockers have so far impressed themselves upon American life that most of the present generation think "calls and congratulations" have always been the great feature of New Year's.

Know then, innocent youth, that as late as fifty years ago "New Year's calls" were an unknown institution in three-fourths of the United States. But in the border states, especially the southern sections of the states just north of the Ohio, the practice of "watching the old year out and the new year in" was the one thing peculiar to New Year's. Wonderful things were to be seen at that hour. Cows fell upon their knees, fowls, went through a sort of reverential performance, the wild animals lost their fear of man, and certain plants of a mysterious nature sprang up in the dooryard.

"I have had the children pull and lay on my lap shoots as long as my hand," was the testimony of one good old lady, and, for aught any hearer could ever discover, she honestly believed it. A little later, when the old superstition died out, "watch night" became a religious proceeding. The ordinary evening meeting was followed by a "song and praise" session. A few minutes before midnight the members of the church gathered around the "altar" (it was merely the space in front of the pulpit, but the old name remained) and sometimes joined hands in a circle.

As the minute hand of the clock neared the XII mark the most profound silence was observed—every Christian was supposed to be in silent prayer for pardon for the sins of the closing year. When the new hour and new year began, all broke into a glad song, often mingled with "shouts" in Methodist or United Brethren churches, and after the song closed the members pledged each other to renewed devotion and "greater faithfulness to duty" for the coming year. The negroes, always quick to adapt their old African customs to their new religion, took special delight in this one, adding many fanciful features, and it still survives in the far south as "walking Egypt."

But what of the original "watch night?" Well, all we can say is that some of our ancestors brought it from Scotland with them, and, as they told of the wonderful things that had happened in Scotland, so their children in Kentucky and Indiana told the same things as having happened in Maryland, and by and by their children in Illinois and Missouri told of them as occurrences in Maryland or Kentucky, and so the superstition lived on in many neighborhoods even to the outbreak of the civil war.

Strange to say, the custom of calling on New Year's day grew most nearly universal among the Chinese and Americans. The former celebrate the new year through three days, during which they call on their friends, exchange greetings in the streets, beat gongs, offer prayers and make a Fourth of July of it in fireworks.

In the days when a little group of frame houses with gable ends of Dutch brick clustered about the fort adjoining the point called the Battery in New York, Mynheer and Vrouw, together with their children, the youths and maidens of New Amsterdam, would go about making visits to each other, celebrating the day as only a primitive people could celebrate it; the elders smoking their pipes and the youngers making merry and all enjoying themselves heartily.

But the burghers of New Amsterdam's new generations came on waxed rich. Broadway passed the old ropewalk near the present site of the Astor house shot over Union square, and where the Fifth Avenue hotel stands met Fifth avenue, climbing Murray Hill, now through the aristocratic dwellings of the city. New Year's came a social gala day. The bloods went half a dozen together, carriages and parties vied with other as to how many calls they make. In the palmy days of New Year's calling the most fashionable people wore evening dress, the doors of the parlors were closed and the rooms lighted. The scene within was like that of an evening reception of present day.

But as the Dutch New Yorkers of old were overrun by the English so the New York swells of to-day have suffered the same fate. The disease called anglomania appeared in the land and seized upon swelldom. The English aristocrat spends the Christmas season at his country seat, when the New York parvenu is wealthy enough to have a country seat he must needs imitate his English model and go out for Christmas. New Year's.

When the New Yorker begins to spend the holidays as its fashionable cousin spends them New Year's began to fade. So for several years New Year's calling in cities has been dropped. Fortunately there still left people who do not have to go in the midst of great parks which lead to the old custom. On New Year's day they visit their friends with some of the simplicity of former days, enjoy it as it was enjoyed then, before the great rush of New Year's calling as it existed ten years ago is past, it is no great loss.

NEW YEAR'S SUPERSTITIONS.

Queer Beliefs of the Peasantry in Provincial England.

New Orleans Picayune: To take a light out of the house before one has been brought in is a solemn injunction on New Year's day of the peasantry of Lincolnshire, England. Death is certain to result if advice is not followed.

To permit a woman to enter a house first on New Year's day is to be a sure forerunner of evil. The same results are said to follow the throwing out of dirty water, ashes or any kind of refuse.

In sweeping the house the dirt must be swept from the door to the fire, or death will be the consequence. The custom largely observed at present is after making the fire in the morning to spread the ashes over the hearth. If in the morning there is an impression of a foot leading from the door, a death in that family is so firmly believed in that preparations are made for it, but if the footmark leads from the house a birth during the year is sure, and preparations are made accordingly.

THE GLOVED HAND

A Detective Story

By BURTON E STEVENSON

Author of "The Holladay Case," "The Marathon Mystery," "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet," etc.

CHAPTER IX—(Continued)

"There can be only one inference," he said. "The dead man is not bleeding—the cord did not cut the flesh. The blood, then, must have come from the murderer. He must have been injured in some way—bleeding profusely. Look at this handkerchief—it's fairly soaked."

I am sure that at that instant the same thought was in Godfrey's mind which flashed through mine for our eyes met, and there was a shadow in his which I knew my own reflected. Then I glanced at Hinman. He was looking at the handkerchief thoughtfully, his lips tightly closed. I could guess what he was thinking, but he said nothing.

Goldberger laid the handkerchief on the table, at last pulled himself back to the body. He bent down, examining the blood spots, and when he stood erect again there was in his face a strange excitement.

"Lend me your glass, Simmonds," he said, and when Simmonds handed him a small pocket magnifying glass he unfolded it and bent above the stains again, scrutinizing each in turn. At last he closed the glass with an emphatic little snap. "This is going to be so difficult after all," he said. "Those spots are finger prints."

With an exclamation of astonishment, Simmonds took the glass and examined the stains, then he handed it to Godfrey, who finally passed it on to me. Looking through it, I saw that Goldberger was right. The stains had been made by human fingers. Most of them were mere smudges, but here and there was one on which faint lines could be dimly traced.

"They're plenty clear enough for our purpose," said Goldberger, "besides they will come out much clearer in photographs. It's lucky this stuff is so smooth and closely woven," he added, fingering a corner of the robe, "or we wouldn't have got even those. It's as hard and fine as silk."

"How do you suppose those marks came there, Mr. Goldberger?" Godfrey asked, and there was in his tone a polite scepticism which evidently annoyed the coroner.

"Why, there's only one way they could come there," Goldberger answered impatiently. "They were put there by the murderer's fingers as he drew the cord tight. Do you see anything improbable in that?"

"Only that it seems too good to be true," Godfrey answered, quietly, and Goldberger, after looking at him a moment, turned away with a shrug of the shoulders.

"See if you can get the cord loose, Simmonds," he said.

The cord was in the form of a running noose, which had been knotted to hold it in place after being drawn tight. Although it had not cut the flesh of the neck, it had sunk deeply into it, and Simmonds worked at the knot for some moments without result. I suspect his fingers were not quite as steady as they might have been, but it was evidently an intricate knot.

"That's a new one on me," he said, at last. "I can't get it loose."

Godfrey bent close above it and looked at it.

"It is a peculiar knot," he agreed. "If you'll permit a suggestion, Mr Goldberger, you'll cut the cord and leave the knot as it is. It may help us to find the man who made it."

"You're right," agreed Goldberger promptly. "Cut the cord, Simmonds." Simmonds got out his pocket knife, opened it and slipped the blade under the cord. He looked at it a moment, and then handed it to Goldberger. The latter examined it carefully.

"It's stained with blood, too," he remarked, and passed it on to Godfrey.

"It looks like curtain cord," Godfrey said, and made a little tour of the room. "Ah!" he added, after a moment, "to mthe door opening into the grounds. "See here!"

He was holding up the end of the cord by which the curtains covering the upper part of the double doors were controlled.

"You were right, Mr Coroner," he said, "in thinking that the murderer entered by this door, for he stopped here and cut off a piece of this cord before going into the room."

"Then he must also have stopped to make it into a noose," remarked Goldberger. "If he did that, he was certainly a cool customer. It's a wonder his victim didn't hear the noise he made."

"Making a knot isn't a noisy operation," Godfrey pointed out, "besides, the back of the chair was toward the door. And then, of course, it's possible his victim did hear him."

"But then he would have jumped from the chair," objected Simmonds.

"Not necessarily. Suppose you were sitting there, and heard a noise, and looked around and saw me standing here, you wouldn't jump from the chair, would you?"

"No, I'd have no reason to jump from you."

"Perhaps Vaughan thought he had no reason to jump from the man he saw—if he saw anyone. I'm inclined to think, however, that he didn't suspect anyone else was in the room until he felt the cord about his throat."

"And, of course," said Goldberger, taking the cord again and looking at it, "it was while the murderer was making it into a noose with his blood-stained fingers that he stained it in that way. Don't you agree, Mr Godfrey?"

"That is a possible explanation," Godfrey conceded.

"But why did he make this second knot?" inquired the coroner, "the knot which holds the noose tight and prevents it from slipping?"

"If he hadn't knotted it like that he would have had to stand there holding it until his victim was dead. As it was, he didn't have to wait."

I shivered a little at the thought of the scoundrel calmly tying the knot to secure his noose, and then leaving his victim to twitch his life out.

"It's no little trick to tie a knot like that," Godfrey added, thoughtfully. "I should like to study it."

"All right," agreed Goldberger, "you can have it whenever you want it," and he got a heavy manila envelope out of his pocket and placed the cord carefully inside. "Now we must get that robe off. We can't run any risk of having those finger prints smeared."

It was a difficult job and a revolting one, for the body had stiffened into its huddled posture, but at last the robe was removed and the body itself lying at full length on its back on the couch. Seen thus, with the light full on it, the face was horrible, and Goldberger laid his handkerchief over the swollen and distorted features, while, 7

Simmonds pulled down the curtains from the inner door and I stood over the body. Then the coroner lifted up the robe and held it out at arms' length.

"What kind of a freak dress is this, anyway?" he asked.

"It's a robe," said Godfrey. "Mr. Vaughan was a mystic."

"A what?"

"A mystic—a believer in Hinduism or some other oriental religion."

"Does he dress this way all the time?"

"I believe so. It is probably the dress of his order."

Goldberger rolled the robe up carefully and said nothing more, but I could see from his expression that he was still inclined to wonder why Vaughan should care to be strange and violent enough to invite anything might happen to him. Then he placed the blood-stained handkerchief in another envelope and coolly put his hand in his pocket and brought out half a dozen more.

"Now," he said, "let's sit down and see what Simmonds tells me it was that worried him, Mr Godfrey. How did it happen to discover the crime?"

The question was asked carelessly, but I could feel the alert mind behind it. I knew that Godfrey felt it, too, from the way in which he told the story, for he told it carefully, and yet with an air of keeping nothing back.

Of the mysterious light he said nothing, but, starting with my finding of the letter and summoning Swain to receive it, told of the arrangements for the rendezvous, dwelling upon it lightly, as a love affair which could have no connection with the tragedy. He passed on to his own arrival from the city, to Swain's return from the rendezvous, and finally to the screams which had reached us, and to the discovery we had made when we burst into the house.

"I summoned Dr. Hinman immediately," he added, "for Miss Vaughan seemed to be in a serious condition, then I called Simmonds, and suggested that he stop for you, Mr Coroner, for I knew that the case would interest you. Dr Hinman arrived perhaps half an hour ahead of you, and had Miss Vaughan put to bed at once. And I guess you know the rest," he concluded.

We had all listened intently. I was pretty sure that Simmonds would make no inferences which Godfrey wished to avoid, but I feared the more penetrating mind of the coroner. His first question proved that I was right to do so.

"Where is this man Swain?" he asked.

"He was suffering from the shock," said Godfrey," and Lester and Dr Hinman took him over to my place and put him to bed. That's where they were when you got here."

"He seemed to be suffering from a slight concussion," Hinman explained. "There was a swelling on one side of his head, as though some one had struck him, and the pupils of his eyes were unsymmetrical. He had also a cut on the wrist," he added, after an instant's hesitation.

"Ah!" commented Goldberger, with a glance at Godfrey. "Had it been bleeding?"

"He cut himself when crossing the wall," Godfrey explained, "a mere scratch, but I believe it did bleed a good deal."

"Ah!" said Goldberger again, and then he turned to the doctor. "Did I understand you to say that he went to sleep?"

"He certainly did. I gave him a good strong opiate to make sure of it."

"Do you think he'll sleep till morning?"

"He'll sleep nine or 10 hours, at least."

"Then that's all right," said Goldberger, and settled back in his chair again. "But didn't anybody live in this house except that old man and his daughter? Aren't there any servants?"

"There must be some somewhere about," answered Godfrey, to whom the question was addressed, "but Lester and I looked through the lower floor and part of the upper one and didn't find any. There's a bell there by the door, but nobody answered when I rang. We didn't have time to go all over the house. We did find one thing, though," he added, as if by an afterthought.

"What was that?"

"There's an adept in one of the rooms upstairs."

Goldberger sat up and stared at him. "An adept," he repeated. "What's that?"

"An expert in mysticism. I judge that Vaughan was his pupil."

"Do you mean he's a Hindu?" asked the coroner as though that would explain everything.

But Godfrey was having his revenge. "I don't know whether he's a Hindu or not," he said, airily. "I didn't get a very good look at him."

"What was he doing?" Goldberger demanded.

"He was just sitting there."

Again Goldberger stared at him, this time suspiciously.

"But, good heavens, man!" he cried. "That was three or four hours ago! You don't suppose he's sitting there yet!"

"Yes," said Godfrey, drily, "I think he is."

Goldberger's face flushed, and he sprang to his feet impatiently.

"Show me the room," he commanded.

"Glad to," said Godfrey laconically, and led the way out into the hall.

The whole crowd tailed along after him. As I rose to follow, I saw that the outside world was turning grey with the approaching dawn.

The nurse, hearing our footsteps on the stairs, looked out in alarm, and held up a warning finger. Godfrey paused for a word with her.

"How is she?" he asked.

"Sleeping quietly," said the nurse; "but please don't make any more noise than you can help."

"We won't," Godfrey promised, and crossed the hall to the door leading into the little entry. Then he paused and looked around at Goldberger. "Better go slow here," he cautioned. "The adept has a pet cobra."

"A snake?"

"The deadliest snake in the world."

Goldberger drew back a little, as did all the others.

"I don't think it will bite us, though," added Godfrey, cheerfully, "if we don't crowd it. It's sitting there, too," and he opened the outer door, passed through, and held back the curtain at the farther end.

I was just behind Goldberger and Simmonds, and I heard their gasp of amazement, as they saw what lay beyond.

The scene had not changed in the slightest detail. The crystal sphere still softly glowed, with intangible shadows flitting across its surface; the adept still sat cross legged staring into its depths; opposite him, the cobra, its hood distended, swayed slowly to and fro.

But as we stood there staring, a single delicate ray of sunlight coming through a pin hole in the curtained window, struck the sphere and seemed to extinguish it. The glow within it flickered and fluttered and finally vanished, and it hung there dull and grey. An instant later, the motionless figure raised its arms high in air, with a motion somehow familiar, then it got slowly to its feet, crossed to the window, drew back the curtain and flung wide the shutter.

The sun was just peeping over the trees to the east, and for a second its light blinded me. Then I saw the adept bowing low before it, his arms still extended. Once, twice, thrice he bowed, as before a deity, while we stood there staring. Then he turned slowly toward us.

"Enter, friends," he said calmly. "The peace of the Holy One be on you, and his love within your hearts!"

CHAPTER X

THE WHITE PRIEST OF SIVA

The adept was an impressive figure as he stood there with the sun behind him throwing a yellow nimbus around his head. The robe he wore was of a rich purple and gave an added effect of height and dignity to a figure already tall. His hair was dark and crinkled like wind swept water, his complexion dark, but with an under blush of red in the cheeks. His lips were scarlet and his eyes coal black and of an arresting brilliance. The whole effect he gave was of transcendent energy and magnetism, nor did he show the slightest fatigue from his long vigil.

His eyes swept our faces, as we stood crowded there in the doorway. He did not seem surprised. If there was an expression in his face except courteous inquiry, it was one of carefully suppressed amusement.

"Enter, friends," he repeated. "What is it you desire?"

His voice was rich and deep, and he spoke with a peculiar intonation, but without accent. It was something of a shock to hear the ordinary words of English speech coming from his lips, for they seemed formed to utter prophecies in unknown tongues.

Goldberger took one step into the room, and then stopped abruptly. Following his eyes, I saw that the cobra had also awakened from its trance, and was regarding us steadily and hissing slightly. The adept smiled as he saw us shrink back.

"Do not fear," he said. "Come, Toto," and stepping across the room, he lifted the cobra in one hand and held it a moment close to him, gently stroking the distended hood. The snake curled itself about his arm and seemed to cuddle to him, but it kept its eyes fixed on us. I could not but smile at the incongruity of its name. Toto was well enough for a French poodle, but for a cobra!

After a moment, the adept lifted the lid of a round basket which stood on the floor near the divan, dropped the snake gently into it, and fastened down the lid. Then he clapped his hands softly, and an instant later the curtains at the rear of the room parted and a strange figure appeared between them.

It was the figure of a man, not over five feet tall and very thin. He was almost as dark as a full blooded negro, and the white burnoose which was thrown about his shoulders and covered him to just below the hips, made him look even darker. His legs were bare and seemed to be nothing but skin and bone. The flat nosed face, with its full lips and prominent eyes, reminded me of an idol I had seen pictured somewhere.

The newcomer bowed low before the adept, and at a sign from him, picked up Toto's basket and disappeared with it through the curtains. He had not even glanced in our direction. The adept turned back to us.

"Now, friends," he said, "will you not enter?"

Goldberger led the way into the room and stopped to look about it. The walls were hung with black velvet, so arranged that windows and doors could be covered also, and the room was absolutely devoid of furniture, save for a low, circular divan in the center of which stood the crystal sphere, supported, as I saw now, by a slender pedestal.

"I have a few questions to ask you," began Goldberger at last, in a voice deferential despite himself.

"Proceed, sir," said the adept, courteously.

"Do you know that Mr Vaughan is dead?"

The adept made a little deprecating gesture.

"Not dead," he protested. "A man does not die. His soul rejoins the Over Soul, that is all. Yes, I know that at midnight the soul of my pupil passed over."

"How did you learn that?" Goldberger demanded.

Kitten's String of Names Left No Doubt as to the Sympathies of Its Owner.

A certain little Philadelphia girl is distinguished chiefly by her fondness for cats and kittens, which she much prefers to dolls.

Several days ago she was sitting on the sunny steps of the front porch, tenderly nursing on her lap a coal-black kitten; very small as yet, but sturdy and full of promise.

"What a pretty kitten!" remarked a neighbor in passing. "What do you call him, my dear?"

"I call him Allies," was the reply.

"Allies! I think you must mean Alice, do you not?" suggested the lady with a smile.

"Oh, no, not Alice! His name is Allies," corrected the child. "His right name," proudly, "is George Albert Nicholas Peter Victor Emmanuel Joffre, but father says that is a heavy load for such a little fellow to carry, so I call him Allies for short!"

As the lady proceeded up the street, she heard a childish voice say tenderly. "Come, Allies, we must go in. It is time for you to have your rations."

Must Have Proteid.

We can live indefinitely and do the hardest kind of work, provided we get enough proteid, but we cannot work satisfactorily on a diet which is rich only in calories. Indeed, a very large proportion of people would be infinitely better in health if they cut down their heat-producing food and relied more on proteid. By diminishing the bulk of the food, we remove the pressure when an undue quantity of the resulting waste exerts on the blood vessels of certain parts of the intestines and this pressure is the cause of certain diseases like hemorrhoids.

The Last Resort.

Pat's one trouble was that he could not wake up in the morning. His landlady had tried every device she could think of, but even the most determined of alarm clocks had no effect on Pat's slumbers.

One day he returned home from his work with a large paper parcel.

"There, now, Mrs. Jones," said he triumphantly, as he unwrapped a huge bell, "and what d'ye think o' that now?"

"Goodness, man!" exclaimed the surprised landlady. "Whatever are you wanting with that great thing?"

As he tucked the bell under his arm and prepared to go upstairs, Pat replied, with a knowing grin:

"Sure, and I'm going to ring it at six o'clock ivry morning and wake mesilf up!"

Commercial Short Courses

Begin a nine, thirteen, or twenty-two weeks' short course in business training at Ellsworth School of Commerce, at Iowa Falls, Iowa, Tuesday January 4th. Special choice of work and low cost.

Dairy Meetings Will Be Held In School Houses

One of the new moves of the State Dairy Association is to visit the different school houses of chosen sections of the state and give lectures pertaining to dairying and other important farm topics. The Klemme vicinity, through the efforts of the Test Association have been fortunate enough to be one of the places chosen for putting on this work, and E. S. Estel, state dairy expert of Waterloo and T. A. Clark of the Iowa Dairy and Food Commission of Des Moines will be here on January 10, 11 and 12 and their itinery will be as follows:

The Tom Nelson school, is Avery township No. 2, on the afternoon of January 10th.

The Fred Walker or Ell Center school on the afternoon of January 11th.

The C. C. Schaefer school in German township No. 2, on the afternoon of January 12th.

These lectures are free to everyone and the parents of the pupils are especially urgently requested to be present. The lectures will be illustrated by the sereopticon and blackboard talks will also be given.

The various school children in these different neighborhoods will pe taken to the different schools so that practically all of the rural school children of the three townships will have the opportunity of taking advantage of this new way of being able to gain this particular knowledge and one that will prove of use and profit to them in after life. There is not any doubt but that dairying is the coming thing and we are glad to see that the school children of this vicinity are going to have this opportunity.

GREETINGS

and sincere wishes for a

Happy New Year

WITH thorough appreciation of your confidence, we take this opportunity of thanking you for the business you have given us in the past year. Particularly to those to whom our prosperity is due---our friends and customers---do we we extend our sincere wishes for continuous success and what comes with it.

We are gratified for their support and confidence in the past and remember it with deep appreciation. Our endeavors to give even better service we hope will merit a continuation of your patronage during the coming year, a year we trust may be a Happy and Prosperous One.

J. N. DAY

To Our Subscribers

We realize the fact that the corn crop has been poor and money rather close with the average farmer, but if it has been close with you, it has been more so with us, as you have failed to make any part of your obligation good with us. But we have had to meet our wholesale bills just the same, as they demand their money, corn crop or no corn crop. A few of the faithful--but a very few--have come in and paid, and those we heartily thank, but the large majority have not as yet even made a promise.

We have always been found willing to be lenient in this matter, in fact too lenient in some cases, but it has now come to a point where we expect and demand a settlement.

Sometime ago we mailed statements to those owing one year in arrears, but as yet less than one per cent have responded. To the former we will say this, unless we receive your remittance during the next ten days, your account with be turned over for collection.

We want as large a subscription list as possible, but cannot afford to send out the paper free gratis.

Please give this notice your prompt attention and call or send in your remittance at once and we will surely feel grateful.

Hoping that the year 1916 will prove more profitable and pleasant for all, I am,

Yours very truly,

M. M. MAGNER,
Publisher
